THE INTERFERENCE WITH GEN. BURNSIDE.

The Report of the Senate Committee on the "Conduct of the War" is a document of 94 closely printed octavo pages and would fill, if printed in full, not far from 20 columns of the TIMES. It opens by rehearsing the circumstances which led to the appointment of the Committee and by stating the leading motive which has guided their inquiries. They state that if the Army of the Potomac had fulfilled the expectations which were warranted by its numbers, its discipline, its courage and its appointments, the rebellion would long since have been closed. Their main object in their investigations has been, therefore, to ascertain why these expectations have been disappointed. They have taken the testimony of about 200 witnesses, including about 100 Generals, and in the report they set forth, as clearly and dispassionately as possible, the historical facts which that large body of evidence establishes.

The first subject which was examined was the disaster at BULL RUN, in July, 1861; and the second, the disaster at BALL'S BLUFF. Of both these affairs the history is given in a separate report.

The report proceeds in the first place to set forth the facts of the organization of the Army of the Potomac after Gen. McCLELLAN assumed command. It numbered 168,000 men, who were well armed and equipped, and were ready and eager for active operations. The generals most familiar with the subject advised the division of the army into corps d'armée, but Gen. McCLELLAN opposed it, and it was accordingly not begun until March, 1862, and then by the direct orders of the President; and in May it was suspended, in consequence of Gen. McCLELLAN's disapproval. While the army lay on the Potomac in front of Washington, great difficulty was experienced in ascertaining the strength of the enemy, which was variously estimated at from 70,000 to 200,000 men; the report shows that even the lowest number was too large. The works built for the defence of Washington, were never properly garrisoned.

In October, 1861, the Navy Department applied for aid from the War Department in opening the Potomac. The proposition made was that the gun-boats should destroy the rebel batteries at Mathias Point, and that troops should then be sent to hold it. The President favored it and applied to Gen. McCLELLAN, who promised to send 4,000 troops at a certain time down the river. The Navy Department had the transports ready at the time designated, and Capt. CHAUNCEY had his gun-boats on hand, but the troops did not arrive. Gen. McCLELLAN, on inquiry from Assistant Secretary FOX as to the reason of his failure, said he feared the troops could not be landed. Mr. FOX replied that the Navy Department would be responsible for their landing. It was then agreed that they should be sent the next night. But they did not come nor were they ever sent. The only reason assigned was that Gen. McCLELLAN feared it might bring on a general engagement.

THE MOVEMENT TO THE PENINSULA.

On the 31st of January the President issued an order to the Army of the Potomac, after providing for the safety of Washington, to be formed into an expedition, "for the immediate object of seizing and occupying a point upon the railroad southwestward of MANASSAS JUNCTION." Gen. McCLELLAN wrote an elaborate reply, remonstrating against this plan, and proposing a movement by way of the Rappahannock and Fortress Monroe, giving the preference to the former route. He stated that thirty days would be required for preparation, and that he regarded success by this route as certain, while it was "by no means certain that they could beat the enemy at Manassas." To this the President replied:

"EXECUTIVE MANSION, WASHINGTON, Feb. 3, 1862.

MY DEAR SON: You and I have talked and thought and prayed for a movement of the Army of the Potomac to be down the Chesapeake, up the Rappahannock to Urbana, and secure land to the vicinity of the railroad at YORK RIVER; mine to move directly to a point on the railroad southward of the enemy. If you will give me satisfactory answers to the following questions I shall gladly yield my plan to yours:

1. Does not your plan involve a greatly larger expenditure of time and money than mine?

2. Wherein is a victory more certain by your plan than mine?

3. Wherein is a victory more valuable by your plan than mine?

4. In fact, would it not be less valuable in this, that it would break no great line of the enemy's communication, while mine would?

5. In case of disaster, would not a safe retreat be more difficult by your plan than by mine?

Yours, truly, A. LINCOLN.

Maj.-Gen. McCLELLAN.

A Council of War was held on the subject by direction of the President, at which twelve Generals were present. Eight voted in favor of Gen. McCLELLAN's plan, and four, McDOWELL, SUMNER, HEINTZELMAN and BANKS against it. The decision was to move by way of Annapolis and the Rappahannock, and it was also decided not to disturb the rebels on the Potomac. Before the movement could be executed, the rebels evacuated Manassas; the army was sent in pursuit, but went no further than Fairfax Court House; and on the 13th of March Gen. McCLELLAN informed a Council of War called at that place, that he proposed to abandon the Rappahannock route, and advance upon Richmond by way of the York and James Rivers. The President on the 84 of March had issued an order that no movement of the army should be made "without leaving in and about Washington such a force as, in the opinion of Gen. McCLELLAN and the commanders of all the army corps, would render the Capital secure." At the Council of War, held on the 13th at Fairfax, the following result was reached:

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE POTOMAC, FAIRFAX COURT-HOUSE, March 13, 1862.

A council of the Generals commanding corps being at the headquarters of the Army of the Potomac were of the opinion:

First—That the enemy having retreated from Manassas to Gordonsville, behind the Rappahannock and the Rapidan, it is the opinion of the Generals commanding army corps, that the operations to be carried on will be best undertaken from Old Point Comfort, between the York and James rivers, upon Richmond; provided, first, that the enemy's vessel, the Merrimac, can be neutralized; second, the means of transportation sufficient for an immediate transfer of the force to its new base can be ready at Washington and Alexandria to move down the Potomac; third, that a naval auxiliary force can be had to silence or aid in silencing the enemy's batteries in YORK RIVER; fourth, that the force to be left to cover Washington shall be such as to give an entire feeling of security for its safety from rebel raids. Unanimous.

Second—If the foregoing cannot be, the army should then be moved against the enemy behind the Rappahannock at the earliest possible moment, and the means for reconstructing bridges, repairing railroads, and stocking them with material sufficient for supplying the army, should at once be collected for both the Orange and the Alexandria and the Aquia and Richmond Railroads. Unanimous.

NOTE—That with the forts on the right bank of the Potomac fully garrisoned, and those on the left bank occupied, a covering force in front of the Virginia line of 35,000 men would suffice. (ERVAY, HEINTZELMAN and McDOWELL.) A total of 40,000 for the defence of the city would suffice. (SUMNER.)

In the judgment of competent officers, a force of 30,000 men was requisite to garrison the forts, which, with the smallest covering force thought necessary, would make a total of 55,000 men. Evidence is submitted to show that the President's requirement had not been fulfilled, and that Gen. McDOWELL's corps was accordingly detained in consequence.

Gen. HEINTZELMAN with the advance of the army arrived at Fortress Monroe on the 23d of March and telegraphed to Gen. McCLELLAN that he had sent out reconnoissances which satisfied him that the rebels had not more than 10,000 troops at Yorktown. Gen. McCLELLAN replied, cautioning him against doing anything to expose the intended line of operations. On the 2d of April Gen. McCLELLAN arrived, and on the 5th the army appeared before the enemy's lines. Evidence was submitted to the Committee showing that the rebels did not determine to reinforce MAGRUDER, who had from 7,000 to 12,000 men at Yorktown, until it was apparent that our forces intended to stop there and commence a regular siege of the place. The general opinion of the officers was that the rebel lines could be easily forced. Gen. McCLELLAN, however, refused all proposals of the kind, and called for McDOWELL's corps. On the 4th of May it was discovered that Yorktown had been evacuated. Pursuit was commenced, and on the 5th the rebels made a stand which led to the

of which, after stating briefly the general result, the Committee say:

"There seems to have been great misapprehension and confusion in relation to the management of the troops at Williamsburgh. When the pursuit first commenced on Sunday, Gen. HEINTZELMAN was instructed by Gen. McCLELLAN to take charge of operations in front. On the morning of Monday orders were sent to Gen. SUMNER to take the command; Gen. McCLELLAN remained behind in Yorktown to superintend the sending two divisions up the York River to West Point. A heavy rain set in on Sunday, rendering the roads almost impracticable for the passage of troops. The troops of the different commands became mingled—divisions and brigades, to some extent were separated from each other—and it seems to have been difficult to get the troops up in time.

"During Monday forenoon Gen. HOOKER, finding himself hard pressed by the enemy, and understanding that Gen. SUMNER had 30,000 troops with him, sent repeatedly for reinforcements. So did Gen. STONEMAN and Gen. HEINTZELMAN, but no reinforcements arrived. Gen. SUMNER states that, having sent Gen. HANCOCK to the right, he had at the center only about 5,000 infantry—the cavalry there not being fitted for operations against the enemy, on account of the country being so wooded. Upon receiving the call for reinforcements to be sent to the left to Gen. HOOKER, he sent staff officers to hurry up troops from the rear, his own corps being some ten miles off, and ordered KEARNEY to reinforce HOOKER. Reinforcements not coming up to Gen. HOOKER as soon as needed, or perhaps expected, the Prince DE JOINVILLE and Gov. SPRAGUE went to Yorktown to urge Gen. McCLELLAN to come up to the front, and take charge of matters there. Gen. SPRAGUE arrived at Yorktown about 1 o'clock, having been about an hour in going down. He testifies that when Gen. McCLELLAN was told the condition of affairs at the front, he remarked that he had supposed 'those in front could attend to that little matter.' After some time Gen. McCLELLAN started from Yorktown, and reached the vicinity of Williamsburgh about 5 o'clock in the afternoon.

"By that time Gen. KEARNEY had reached the field and reinforced Gen. HOOKER, taking command, being the senior in rank to Gen. HOOKER. Gen. HANCOCK had been engaged on the right, but, upon being reinforced, had succeeded in repulsing the enemy, losing about forty men. The principal fighting was done by the troops under Gen. HOOKER, his division sustaining a loss of about 1,700 men. Before he was reinforced, his troops were obliged to hold their position with the bayonet and such ammunition as the men could obtain from the bodies of those who had fallen, the roads being so muddy that it was impossible to bring up fresh ammunition.

"That night the enemy evacuated their position at Williamsburgh. Gen. McCLELLAN states that after he arrived on the field he was so satisfied that the enemy had been beaten, and would be compelled to evacuate their position that night or be taken at a great disadvantage, that he countermanded orders to the divisions of RICHARDSON and SEDGWICK and sent them back to Yorktown.

The next day the pursuit was continued for a short distance by Gen. STONEMAN and the cavalry, with a small body of infantry. Several of the generals testify that, had the enemy been promptly followed up after the battle of Williamsburgh, they could have been followed right into Richmond—one of them says without firing a gun. Gen. McCLELLAN says that the roads were so bad, in consequence of the rains, that it was impracticable to make a vigorous pursuit.

The battle of Williamsburgh appears to have been fought under many and serious disadvantages. Nothing was known of the nature of the country or the defensive works of the enemy until our troops arrived before them; there was no controlling mind in charge of the movements; there was uncertainty in regard to who was in command; each general fought as he considered best; and, by the time the general commanding appeared on the field, the principal part of the fighting was over."

THE ADVANCE TO THE CHICKAHOMINY.

The distance from Williamsburgh to the Chickahominy was from forty to fifty miles. The army was two weeks in passing over it. The first troops who crossed were the corps of Gen. KEYES, on the 24th of May, followed by HEINTZELMAN's on the 25th. The rest remained on the left bank. Gen. McCLELLAN continued to call for reinforcements, and in a letter written May 21, asked that Gen. McDOWELL might be sent to him by water rather than by land, as the most expeditious way, and that he and his forces should be placed under his orders, in the ordinary way. In reply, the President stated: "Gen. McDOWELL can reach you by land sooner than he could get aboard of boats, if the boats were ready at Fredericksburgh, unless his march should be resisted, in which case the force resisting him will not be confronting you at Richmond. By land, he will reach you in five days after starting, whereas by water, he would not reach you in two weeks, judging by past experience." Preparations were accordingly made for McDOWELL to leave Fredericksburgh to join McCLELLAN; but JACKSON's expedition down the Shenandoah Valley led to his being retained.

"On the 31st of May and the 1st of June, the battles of Seven Pines and Fair Oaks were fought. As there has been so much controversy in regard to the conduct of some of the troops engaged in that battle, your Committee will refer more particularly to the testimony of Gen. CASEY, who commanded the advanced division, upon which the attack was first made. Gen. CASEY states that, when the campaign of the Peninsula commenced, his division consisted principally of raw and inexperienced troops. They had suffered greatly from the labors and exposures incident upon the siege of Yorktown and the advance of the troops up the Peninsula. Some of them had been for weeks without shelter, being compelled to leave their camp equipage behind when ordered on the pursuit of the enemy after the evacuation of Yorktown. That division took the lead across the Chickahominy, taking up a position at Seven Pines, where it established itself by throwing up intrenchments and cutting abattis.

"A few days before the battle at Seven Pines, contrary to the advice and opinion of Gen. KEYES and Gen. CASEY, the division was covered three-quarters of a mile in front, within six miles of Richmond, his pickets extending within five miles. They had no support on their right or their left, the remainder of the corps to which they belonged (KEYES) being in their rear. They at once commenced digging rifle-pits and cutting abattis, the pickets at night being attacked by the enemy, who were repulsed. About 11 o'clock on the morning of the 31st the pickets reported the enemy approaching, and an aid of Gen. JOHNSON was captured and brought in with important papers upon him. Gen. CASEY, with this aid and his general officer of the day, went to Gen. KEYES and reported the circumstances to him. Gen. KEYES testifies that for some days before the attack he sent to Gen. McCLELLAN reports of his condition, the threatening attitude of the enemy in his immediate vicinity, and urged that Gen. SUMNER be sent across to his support. This was not done, however, until after the attack commenced. Reports continued to come in of the approach of the enemy. The division was called out and formed, the working men called in, and preparations made to meet the coming attack. Two lines of battle were formed—one in the rifle-pits, and another about one-third of a mile in advance—composed of five or six regiments and four pieces of artillery. A regiment had previously been sent out to support the pickets. About twenty minutes to one o'clock the enemy commenced the attack in a force supposed to amount to about 35,000 men, attacking in front and on both flanks. After fighting some time, the enemy continuing to come on in force, the forces in front fell back to the rifle-pits, and fought there until nearly surrounded. Reinforcements had been promised, and Gen. CASEY had selected the position to which they were to be assigned; but no reinforcements came up to his position until just before he was forced to fall back from his second line, when a single regiment arrived. After about three hours' fighting, the division felt back from their second line, with a loss of 1,633 in killed, wounded and missing. In the course of an hour after CASEY's division had been driven back, the remainder of our forces were swept back from a mile and a half to two miles from CASEY's first line, when the enemy were checked, and the fighting ceased for the day.

During the battle Gen. SUMNER, whose corps was on the left bank of the Chickahominy, was ordered by Gen. McCLELLAN to hold his forces in readiness to cross. Gen. SUMNER not only did that, but at once called out his forces, and moved them until the heads of the columns were at the bridges ready to cross, thereby saving between one and two hours. When the order came to cross he immediately moved his forces in the direction of the field of battle, came up with and engaged the enemy, and relieved the pressure upon the troops engaged on his left.

The next day, the 1st of June, the enemy attacked Gen. SUMNER at Fair Oaks. Gen. HOOKER, who had been ordered forward the day before by Gen. HEINTZELMAN with one-half of his division, hearing the firing of the morning upon Gen. SUMNER's forces, proceeded at once in that direction and engaged the enemy. In a short time the enemy was repulsed, and fell back in confusion. There was no communication between the forces under Gen. SUMNER and those under Gen. HEINTZELMAN, (HOOKER's,) but each fought as he deemed best under the circumstances. Gen. McCLELLAN was with the main part of the army on the left bank of the Chickahominy. After the fight was over he came across to the right bank of the river.

On the morning of Monday, Gen. HEINTZELMAN ordered Gen. STONEMAN to make a reconnoissance in force, which he did, advancing to within four miles of Richmond, meeting with no resistance except a little from the enemy's pickets. Upon being informed by Gen. HEINTZELMAN of what he had done, Gen. McCLELLAN ordered the troops to be recalled and occupy the position that had been held by CASEY's division.

The officers engaged in that battle, who have been examined, testify that the army could have pushed right on to the City of Richmond with little resistance; that the enemy was very much broken and demoralized, throwing away arms, clothing, &c., that might impede their flight."

GEN. McCLELLAN'S INTENTIONS TO ADVANCE.

Gen. McCLELLAN seems to have contemplated an immediate movement upon Richmond, for, the day after the battle, June 2, he writes to the Secretary of War:

"The enemy attacked in force and with great spirit yesterday morning, but are everywhere most signally repulsed with great loss. Our troops charged frequently on both days, and uniformly broke the enemy. The result is, that our left is within four miles of Richmond. I only wait for the river to fall to cross with the rest of the force and make a general attack. Should I find them holding firm in a very strong position, I may wait for what troops I can bring up from Fort Monroe. But the more I see of the enemy I am more and more assured that I do not fear for odds against me. The Victory is complete, and all credit is due to the gallantry of our officers and men."

The movement was not made, however, as Gen. McCLELLAN states, because of the high stage of water and the bad roads.

On the 6th of June McCALL's division of Gen. McDOWELL's corps was ordered to join the army on the Peninsula. On the 8th of June Gen. McCLELLAN telegraphs: "I shall be in perfect readiness to move forward and take Richmond the moment that McCall reaches here and the ground will admit the passage of artillery." On the 10th of June McCALL's troops commenced arriving at the White House.

Preparations continued to be made in Washington to send down by land, from Fredericksburgh, the remainder of Gen. McDOWELL's corps, he being directed to cooperate fully with Gen. McCLELLAN, but retaining an independent command. This does not appear to have been in accordance with Gen. McCLELLAN's wishes; for, on the 16th of June he telegraphs to the Secretary of War:

"I ought to be distinctly understood that McDOWELL and his force are completely under my control. I received a telegram from him requesting that McCALL's Division might be placed so as to join him immediately upon his arrival. That request does not breathe the proper spirit; whatever troops come to me must be disposed of as I do the most good with them, and not feel that in such circumstances any division is which McDOWELL, Gen. McDOWELL should wish the general interest to be sacrificed for the purpose of increasing his command. If I cannot fully control all his troops I want none of them, but would prefer to fight the battle with what I have, and let other generals be responsible for the results."

On the 16th of June Gen. McCLELLAN telegraphs to the Secretary of War that he has received information from deserters to the effect that troops have left Richmond to reinforce JACKSON; that the movement commenced on the 6th; and that, if reinforcements have gone to JACKSON, they are probably not less than 10,000 men; that he cannot vouch for the truth of the statement, but that it seems pretty certain that it is believed in Richmond and among the rebel troops. To this the President replies, on the same day, that the information is corroborated by a despatch from Gen. KING at Fredericksburgh, and remarks: "If this is true, it is as good as a reinforcement to you of an equal force."

On the same day Gen. McCLELLAN telegraphs to the President:

"A general engagement may take place at any hour. An advance by us involves a battle more or less decisive. The enemy exhibits at every point a resolution to meet us. They certainly have great numbers and extensive works. If ten or fifteen thousand men have left Richmond to reinforce JACKSON, it illustrates their strength and confidence. After to-morrow we shall fight the rebel army as soon as Providence will permit. We shall await only a favorable condition of the earth and sky, and the completion of some necessary preliminaries."

The return of Gen. McCLELLAN to the Adjutant-General's office gives the following as the strength of the army on the Peninsula on the 20th of June: Present for duty, 115,102; special duty, sick and in arrest, 12,225; absent, 39,511—total, 166,836.

PRELIMINARIES OF THE SEVEN DAYS' BATTLE.

On the 24th and 25th of June, Gen. McCLELLAN telegraphs the Secretary of War that he is informed by deserters and contrabands that JACKSON is contemplating an attack upon his right and rear. As this dispatch of Gen. McCLELLAN, and the one of the President in reply, are dated immediately previous to the "seven days' battle," they are given here in full.

Received 8.50 P. M.

HAS. McCLELLAN'S, June 25—6.15 P. M.

I have just returned from the field, and find your dispatch in regard to JACKSON. Several contrabands, just in, giving information confirming the supposition that JACKSON's advance is at or near Hanover Court-House, and that BEAUREGARD arrived, with strong reinforcements, in Richmond yesterday. I believe the attack will either be on my right and rear. The rebel force is stated at 200,000, including JOHNSTON and BEAUREGARD. I shall have to contend against vastly superior odds, if these reports be true; but this army will do all in the power of man to hold their position and repulse any attack. I regret my great inferiority of numbers, but feel that I am in no way responsible for it, as I have not failed to represent repeatedly the necessity of reinforcements; that this was the decisive point; and that all the available means of the Government should be concentrated here. I will do all that a General can do with the splendid army I have the honor to command; and if it is destroyed by overwhelming numbers, can at least die with it, and share its fate. But if the result of the action which will occur to-morrow, or within a short time, is a disaster, the responsibility cannot be thrown on my shoulders; it must rest where it belongs.

Since I commenced this, I have received additional intelligence confirming the supposition in regard to JACKSON's movements and BEAUREGARD. I shall probably be attacked to-morrow, and now go to the other side of the Chickahominy to arrange for the defence on that side. I feel that there is no use in my again asking for reinforcements.

GEO. B. McCLELLAN, Maj.-Gen.

Hon. E. M. STANTON, Secretary of War.

The answer of the President is as follows:

WASHINGTON, June 25, 1862.

Your three dispatches of yesterday, in relation to the affair, ending with the statement that you completely succeeded in making your point, are very gratifying.

The latter one, of 6.15 P. M., suggesting the probability of your being overwhelmed by 200,000 men and talking of whom the responsibility will belong, pains me very much. I give you all I can, and act on the presumption that you will do the best you can with what you have; while you continue, unassumingly I think, to assume that I could give you more if I would. I have omitted, I shall omit, no opportunity to send you reinforcements whenever I possibly can.

A. LINCOLN.

Major-General McCLELLAN.

On the afternoon of the 26th of June, between 2 and 3 o'clock, the enemy, in considerable force, made a vigorous attack upon the troops of Gen. McCALL's division, stationed at Mechanicsville, consisting of the two brigades of SEDGWICK and REYNOLDS. The action lasted until nightfall, when the enemy were repulsed. Troops were sent up by Gen. PORTER to the assistance of those engaged; but they were not in the battle, though some of them were in position to support the right of the line.

About 12 o'clock that night the troops were ordered to fall back to Gaines' Mill, which was accomplished without loss.

THE BATTLE OF GAINES' MILL—GENERAL FEATURES OF THE DEFENCE.

On the 27th the battle of Gaines' Mill was fought, principally by the troops under Gen. PORTER. Our forces there engaged numbered from 27,000 to 30,000; the force of the enemy being from two to three times that number. The enemy were in such superior force that, although our troops fought with exceeding bravery, they were driven back, with a loss of about 9,000 men, in killed, wounded and missing.

Gen. McCLELLAN was questioned as to the policy of leaving the right wing, consisting of only about 30,000 men, to meet the attack of the superior force of the enemy, instead of withdrawing it to the right bank of the Chickahominy, before the battle of Gaines' Mill. His testimony on that point is as follows:

Question—Whether you might have been the intentions of the enemy, as the attack was to have been made by him, would it not have been better to have placed both wings of our army on the same side of the Chickahominy prior to the battle of Gaines' Mill?

Answer—I do not think they ought to have been brought to the same side of the river before they actually were.

Q—What advantage was gained by leaving the right wing of our army to be attacked by a greatly superior force?

A—It prevented the enemy from getting on our flank and rear, and, in my opinion, enabled us to withdraw the army and its material.

Q—Will you explain what was done by the right wing of our army at or about the time the left was engaged which saved our flank from attack and enabled the army and its material to be withdrawn?

A—By desperate fighting they inflicted as great a loss on the enemy as to check his movement on the left bank of the river, and gave us time to get our material out of the way.

THE RETREAT TO THE JAMES RIVER.

During the night after the battle of Gaines' Mill, all our forces were concentrated on the right bank of the Chickahominy, and the next day the movement to the James River was determined upon. Gen. HEINTZELMAN testifies that the night after that battle he was sent for by Gen. McCLELLAN; that he found everything packed, ready to leave; that Gen. McCLELLAN said there were two things to be done—to concentrate his forces and risk all on a battle, or to withdraw to the James River; that if he risked a battle there, and was beaten, the army was destroyed. Gen. HEINTZELMAN advised him not to risk a battle under such circumstances, for if that army was lost the cause would be lost; that it were better to go to the James River and await reinforcements. Gen. McCLELLAN replied that he was of that opinion himself, and that was determined upon. That night, at 12.30 A. M., Gen. McCLELLAN telegraphs the Secretary of War that he (Gen. McCLELLAN) is not responsible for the result, but feels that the Government has not sustained his army.

To this the President replies, on the 28th: "If you have had a drawn battle, or a repulse, it is the price we pay for the enemy not being in Washington. We protected Washington, and the enemy concentrated on you. Had we stripped Washington he would have been upon us before the troops sent could have got to you.

Save your army, at all events. Will send reinforcements as fast as we can. Of course they cannot reach you to-day, to-morrow or next day."

The 29th of June passed without any serious fighting. Col. R. S. ALEXANDER testifies that on the afternoon of that day he was sent for by Gen. McCLELLAN, and went to his headquarters, at Savage's Station, arriving there about dark. He received instructions to proceed with an escort to the James River, send back a sufficient number of men to act as guides for the different columns of the army, communicate with the gunboats, and order supplies to be brought up the river; to examine both shores of the James to the mouth of the Chickahominy, and ascertain the landing places; proceed up the Chickahominy to the head of navigation and ascertain the places where the army could cross, in case of necessity, and then return to headquarters and report. He left Savage's Station that night, and reached the James River the next afternoon. By the time he had completed his examination the army had reached the James River at Malvern.

While at headquarters, receiving his instructions, he was shown, as he testifies, a printed order, not then issued, directing the destruction of the baggage of officers and men, and the tents, camps, equipage and things of that kind; appealing to the army to submit to this privation, as it would be only temporary—"only for a few days." He remonstrated with Gen. McCLELLAN against issuing such an order; that it would have a bad effect, would demoralize the army, as it would be telling them more plainly than they could be told in any other way that they were defeated and running for their lives. The order was not issued, and Gen. McCLELLAN testifies that he has no recollection of any such order.

The retreat to the James River having been decided upon, the army took up its march, being attacked by the enemy in the day time, and however successful in repelling those attacks, evacuating their positions during the night. The actions of Savage's Station, Glendale and Malvern were fought during the movement of the army to the James, the enemy being repulsed in each day's fighting, and our army falling back, under orders, during the night.

It would appear, from all the information your Committee can obtain, that the battles were fought, the troops handled, new dispositions made and old ones changed, entirely by the corps commanders, without directions from the Commanding General. He would place the troops in the morning, then leave the field and look the position for the next day, giving no directions until the close of the day's fighting, when the troops would be ordered to fall back during the night to the new position selected by him. In this manner the army reached the James River.

The battle of Malvern Hill, of the 1st of July, was the most fiercely contested of any upon the Peninsula. The troops were placed in the morning, under direction of Gen. McCLELLAN, who then left the field, returning to it again in the afternoon. The first action of the day commenced about 10 o'clock in the forenoon, but did not continue long. The principal action, when the enemy attacked most vigorously and persistently, commenced late in the afternoon, and continued till after dark, the enemy being repulsed and beaten at every point. Many of the officers examined by your Committee are of the opinion that the enemy were so severely punished on that day that they could have been followed into Richmond, had our army followed them up vigorously.

It is true that our army had been severely tried during the preceding week, fighting, as they did, nearly every day, and retreating every night. The corps commanders and their troops, after them, fought most bravely—no troops better. However disheartened they may have become by what all must have regarded as a precipitate retreat during the night, they still fought with the most obstinate bravery when attacked in the day time by an exultant and successful enemy.

The Commanding General, however, determined to fall back from Malvern to Harrison's Bar, notwithstanding the victory won there by our army. He seems to have regarded his army as entirely unfitted to meet the enemy, for on the day of the battle at Malvern, evidently before that battle took place, he writes to the Adjutant-General of the army from HARRISON'S plantation:

"My men are completely exhausted, and I dread the result if we are attacked to-day by fresh troops. If possible, I shall retire to-night to Harrison's Bar, where the gunboats can better aid in carrying off our material. I remain to urge that not an hour should be lost in sending me fresh troops. More gunboats are much needed."

THE RESPONSIBILITY QUESTION AGAIN.

On the 2d of July, the President telegraphs to Gen. McCLELLAN:

"Your dispatch of yesterday morning induces me to hope your army is having some rest. In this hope allow me to remove with you for a moon out. When you ask for 50,000 men to be promptly sent you, you must surely labor under some great mistake or delusion. Recently you sent papers showing your disposal of forces made just before for the defence of Washington, and advising a return to that plan. I find included, in and about Washington, 75,000 men. Now please be assured that I have not men enough to fill that very plan by 15,000. All of Gen. FREMONT's in the valley; all of Gen. BANKS'; all of Gen. McDOWELL's not with you; and all in Washington, taken together, do not exceed, if they reach, 60,000, with Gen. West and Gen. DIX added to those mentioned. I have not outside of your army 75,000 more than one-half of the mentioned. Thus, the idea of sending you 50,000, or any other considerable force, promptly, is simply absurd. If, in your frequent mention of responsibility, you had the impression that I blame you for not doing more than you can, please be relieved of such impression. I only beg that in like manner you will not ask impossibilities of me.

If you think you are not strong enough to take Richmond just now, I do not ask you to try just now. Save the army, material and personnel, and I will strengthen it for the offensive again as fast as I can."

On the 3d of July, after the army had reached Harrison's Bar, Gen. McCLELLAN writes to the Secretary of War:

"I am in hopes that the enemy is as completely worn out as we are; he was certainly very severely punished in the last battle. * * * It is, of course, impossible to estimate as yet our losses, but I doubt whether there are to-day more than 50,000 men with their colors.

To accomplish the great end of capturing Richmond, and putting an end to the rebellion, reinforcements should be sent to me rather much over than less than 100,000 men."

The retreat of the army from Malvern to Harrison's Bar was very precipitate. The troops upon their arrival there were huddled together in great confusion, the entire army being collected within a space of about three miles along the river. No orders were given the first day for occupying the heights which commanded the position, nor were the troops so placed as to be able to receive an attack in force by the enemy, and nothing but a heavy rain, thereby preventing the enemy from bringing up their artillery, saved the army there from destruction. The enemy did succeed in bringing up some of their artillery, and threw some shells into the camp, before any preparations for defence had been made. On the 3d of July the heights were taken possession of by our troops and works of defence commenced, and then, and not until then, was our army secure in that position.

The army remained at Harrison's Bar during July and a part of August. The future operations of the army were discussed. On the 30th of July, Gen. HALLECK visited it, and was met by Gen. BURNSIDE, who came up from North Carolina. A council of general officers was called, and a majority were in favor of withdrawing the army. Gen. McCLELLAN objected, and called for 50,000 reinforcements to renew the movement upon Richmond. Gen. HALLECK informed him that the Government could give him only 20,000, and he consented to advance with that number. Gen. HALLECK left with this understanding, but the next day Gen. McCLELLAN renewed his call for 15,000 or 20,000 more, and it was then decided to withdraw the army as rapidly as possible in order to cooperate with Gen. POPE, then in presence of a superior force of the enemy. Gen. McCLELLAN stated his available force at that time at 85,000 or 90,000 men. In closing this portion of their Report, the Committee submit the following, from the conclusion of Gen. J. G. BARNARD's Report of the operations of the Engineering Department:

GEN. BARNARD'S OPINION AS TO THE CAUSES OF THE FAILURE OF THE PENINSULAR CAMPAIGN.

One of the prominent among the causes of ultimate failure was the inaction of eight months from August, 1861, to April, 1862. More than any other wars, rebellion demands rapid measures. In November, 1861, the army of the Potomac, if not fully supplied with all the material, was yet about as complete in numbers, discipline, and organization as it ever became. In the four months the great marine avenue to the capital of the nation was blockaded, and that capital kept in a partial state of siege by a greatly inferior enemy, in face of a movable army of 150,000 men.

In the Winter of 1861 and 1862 Norfolk could and should have been taken. The navy demanded it, the country demanded it, and the means were ample. By its capture the curse of the Merrimac, which proved so disastrous to our subsequent operations, would have been prevented. The preparation of this vessel was known, and the NAVY Department was not without outforebodings of the mischief it would do.

Though delay might mature more comprehensive plans, and promise greater results, it is not the first case in which it has been shown that successful war involves something more than abstract military principles. The true question was to seize the first practicable moment to satisfy the, perhaps, unreasonable but natural longing of an ambitious nation for results to justify its launch confidence, and to take advantage of an undivided command and untrammeled liberty of action while they were possessed.

When the army did move, a plan was adopted perfectly certain to invite, nay, compel interference, and when the army was to go by Annapolis to the lower Chesapeake, I felt confident that one-half would scarcely have been embarked before the other half would have been ordered back to Washington. The enemy was then at Manassas, and it was clear, even if not really of an attack upon Washington was so obvious, so certain to create a panic, which no Executive could resist, that interference with the removal of the rest of the army was certain.

When the enemy fell back behind the Rappahannock, and destroyed the railroad bridges, the circumstances were greatly changed, and there were strong arguments for the line adopted. Yet, results have proved how many reasons there were to be considered, besides the purely military ones, which opposed themselves to the adoption of such a line.

The facts connected with the withholding of McDOWELL's corps have been so completely exhibited in the proceedings of the McDOWELL Court of inquiry, that every one who wishes can form his own judgment. Whether it was wise or unwise, it was one of those things resulting from the taking of a line of operations which did not then cover Washington.

At the time the army of the Potomac landed on the peninsula the rebel cause was at its lowest ebb. Its armies were demoralized by the defeats of Fort Royal, Mill Spring, Fort Henry, Fort Donelson, Roanoke Island, and Pea Ridge; and reduced by sickness, loss in battle, expirations of periods of service, &c.; while the conscription law was not yet even passed, it seemed as if it needed but one vigorous grips to end forever this rebellion so nearly throttled. How, then, happened it that the day of the initiation of the campaign of this magnificent Army of the Potomac was the day of the resuscitation of the rebel cause, which seemed to grow pari passu with the slow progress of its operations?

However I may be committed to any expression of professional opinion to the contrary, (I certainly did suggest it,) my opinion now is, that the lines of Yorktown should have been occupied. There is reason to believe that they were not held in strong force when our army appeared before them; and we know that they were far from complete. The prestige of power, the morale, were on our side. It was due to ourselves to confirm and sustain it. We should probably have succeeded. But if we had failed, it may well be doubted whether the shock of an unsuccessful assault would be more demoralizing than the labors of a siege.

Our troops toiled a month in the trenches, or lay in the swamps of Warwick. We lost few men by the siege; but disease took a fearful hold of the army, and toil and hardship, unredeemed by the excitement of combat, impaired their morale. We did not carry with us from Yorktown so good an army as we took there. Of the bitter fruits of that month gained by the enemy we have tasted to our heart's content. They are not yet exhausted.

The siege having been determined upon, we should have opened our batteries on the place as fast as they were completed. The fire on the troops would have been less injurious. It would have lightened the siege and shortened our labors; and, besides, we would have had the credit of driving the enemy from Yorktown by force of arms, whereas, as it was, we only induced him to evacuate for prudential reasons.

Yorktown having fallen, however, as it did, it was right to pursue the enemy with our whole force. But the battle of Williamsburgh, fought, as it was, without reconnoitering the position, without concert of action among the different corps and division commanders, and almost without orders, was a blunder which ought not to have happened.

We know of this position beforehand, and we know it was fortified. We might have been sure, if the enemy made a stand there, that it would be a strong one, for he would be fighting for time to get his trains out of our reach. We fought; we lost several thousand men, and we gained nothing. If we had not fought, the next day a battle would in all probability have been unnecessary. But if it had been necessary, we should have had time to have brought up our resources, reconnoitered the position, and delivered our attack in such a way that some result would have flowed from it.

We had every advantage. FRANKLIN's division landed at West Point on the next day, and SUMNER's division on the day following. Those two divisions, had the enemy waited another day at Williamsburgh, could have cut his communication, and in that case we would have been superior in his front, and have had two divisions in his rear. His hasty retreat, and perhaps his capture, must inevitably have followed, and the great object of keeping PAMLICO so long embarked, and finally sending him to West Point, would have been accomplished.

On leaving Williamsburgh we should have pursued the Chickahominy, and connected with the army on the James River. We should then have had a united army, and the cooperation of the navy, and probably would have been in Richmond in two weeks. The fact that we did not know the character of the Chickahominy as an obstacle, (as it lay across our direct road to Richmond,) that our transports were on the York River, and that the railroad furnished a good means of supply to the army, that we wished to connect with McDOWELL coming from Fredericksburgh, &c., determined our route. In taking it we lost essentially all that was worth going so far to gain, viz; the James River approach and the cooperation of the navy.

The route chosen, two weeks should not have been spent in traversing the forty miles from Williamsburgh to Bottom's and New Bridges; and the barrier of the Chickahominy being left unguarded at Bottom's Bridge, no time should have been lost in making use of the circumstance to turn and seize the passage of New Bridge, which might have been done by the 28th of May, and even earlier, had measures been pressed and prepared for it.

The repulse of the rebels at Fair Oaks should have been taken advantage of. It was one of those occasions which, if not seized, do not repeat themselves. We now know the state of disorganization and dismay in which the rebel army retreated. We now know that it could have been followed into Richmond. Had it been so, there would have been no resistance to overcome to bring over our right wing. Although we did not then know all that we now do, it was obvious at that time that when the rebels struck the blow at our left wing, they did not leave any means in their hands unused to secure success. It was obvious enough that they struck with their whole force, and yet we repulsed them in disorder with three-fifths of ours. We should have followed them up at the same time that we brought over the other two-

MONDAY, April 6, A. M.

The Trade of the past week was very active, both in the line of Import entries and of Export clearances of Domestic Produce. The Export of Specie was light, the General ruling of Exchange through the week being from 1 to 2 per cent. below the relative price of Gold Coin, which on a speculative movement went up about 12 per cent. The Import entries include 8,400 bales of Cotton imported from Liverpool, of all descriptions, though chiefly the lower descriptions, in light bags. The entries are also quite heavy of Teas, Sugars, Coffee and Wool. The general trade of the City improved in sales and prices from the recovery in the price of Gold, which on the fall of 30 per cent. had seriously checked business in both Foreign and Domestic Merchandise. The Customs duties of the week, (nearly all were paid in Gold,) amount to $667,000. The disbursements from the Treasury office in this City were unusually heavy, both in Gold for interest on 7.30 ₩ cents. and the maturing Certificates issued last Spring, and in United States Currency. The receipts of the latter for the New Loan of 1862, and on Deposit of 5 ₩ cent., were at the rate of $1,200,000@$1,500,000 ₩ day, notwithstanding which the disbursements of the week have reduced the general balance $6,578,557, or to $11,618,411, against $18,891,948 at the close of the previous week. Of course, under such movements, the market for Money remains easy, and the supply on the increase at 5@6 ₩ cent. The Government Loan Agent, Mr. JAY COOKE, of Philadelphia, and his Sub-Agents or correspondents here, have averaged over a million of dollars ₩ day in subscriptions to the New Loan of 1862, by the conversion at par of United States Notes of legal tender, or checks on Banks payable in such Currency. The subscriptions with Messrs. FISK & HATCH, No. 53 Wall-street, alone, we are informed, exceed $1,000,000. There is some delay in furnishing promptly the Bonds of the right denominations, or the subscriptions might have been made larger. The Assistant-Treasurer, Mr. CISCO, has advertised that subscriptions or purchases for resale can be made through his office, also, and the Bonds furnished for delivery in New-York. The delay referred to has been unavoidable, because of the recent sudden and rapid turn in the conversions, which soon ran ahead of the supply of blanks of certain denominations from the engravers. This, however, will be remedied in a few days. The Loan Agent and his correspondents are entitled to great credit for their energy and promptness in furnishing circular information in reference to the nature of the Loan and the means of converting the Currency into it, together with other useful and interesting information in regard to the condition of the Public Debt and the resources and revenues of the country pledged to its support. Messrs. LIVERMORE, CLEWS & Co. and Messrs. WENMILE & Co., of this City, as well as Messrs. FISK & HATCH, have contributed liberally to the success of the movement.

The Stock Exchange shows higher figures for the Share list, and also on the Railway Bonds, and a steady decrease for Government Stocks and Treasury paper, as compared with the previous week. Speculation in the Railway Shares was chiefly on Harlem, and Hudson River. The Common Stock of the latter road was the most active share of Saturday [illegible] than before. The daily transactions were very large, culminating on Saturday in the sale of nearly one third the Capital, or about 80,000 shares of $50 each. The price also appeared to reach its maximum for the present, say 62 ₩ cent., subsequently falling off to 56, and finally closing 57½ ₩ cent. Hudson River advanced 3 ₩ cent. The other Roads from 1 to 2½ ₩ cent. each, closing steady, but with no decided buoyancy. Pacific Shares mark 2½ ₩ cent. higher, closing—before the important news of the breaking up of the rival line sid Nicaragua—at 190½@191 ₩ cent.

The changes in Gold Coin on Saturday were rather more frequent than on Friday, though not violent. Early in the forenoon the bidding on the Street advanced to 156, but fell back at the First regular Board to 154¾. At the Second Board the sales were at 155@155¼, and the final price on the Street was about 155@154¾ ₩ cent. In the Share market, the feature of the speculative list was Harlem, large cash sales of which were made at 62@61@60 ₩ cent. cash. These sales eased the deliveries of the Stock, and in the afternoon the price fell to 59@58 ₩ cent., with considerable sales after the printed report at the lowest figure. From this there was a recovery of 1½ ₩ cent. The other Railways were generally steady, and so were the Bonds. The demand improved for 7.30 ₩ cent. Treasury Bonds. The closing prices compare as follows with Friday night:

March, 1862.....	268,662 46
Increase.....	$97,838 38
Whole Gain in Six Months.....	$650,198

The Capital Stock of the Company being only $3,770,000, now entirely free of floating debt, and the net income last year having exceeded the charge upon the Funded Debt for Interest and Sinking Fund, by $675,791, it is not too much to say, in the foregoing increase, that this favorite metropolitan road is at length assuming the profitable position for its shareholders so long enjoyed by the New-Jersey Railroad and Transportation Company, on the opposite side of the river.

Mr. THOMAS M. WEEHAN, of the Stock Exchange, formerly with Messrs. Jacob Lorsen & Co., has established offices at No. 20 Broad-st.

The Assembly bill to restrain Bank issues upon Gold Coin or Bullion and Foreign Bills of Exchange, is made the special order in the State Senate for Tuesday. There is every public reason why it should become a law, and no private or mercantile reason against it which should for a moment be put in competition with the credit of the National paper Currency which our own Courts have just decided must be a legal tender for all debts, public and private, whether contracted before or subsequent to the Congressional act of 25th of February, 1862. It is also desirable, (and we hope Mr. CONNOLLY or some other Senator will move the amendment,) to restrain the Banks, during the suspension of their own payments in Specie, from buying or selling Gold or Silver on their own account, for speculation or otherwise. Such things, we have reason to believe, are done in this market every week, though the number of Banks engaged in the speculation is not large.

The General Term of the Supreme Court for the Seventh Judicial District of New York, decided, at Rochester, on Saturday, that the United States legal tender notes were constitutional as to debts contracted before the passage of the law making such notes a legal tender. All the four Judges concurred.

FARMS.

EXECUTOR'S SALE—A VALUABLE FARM AT AUCTION.—The farm belonging to the late Thos. Orton, deceased, will be offered for sale at auction, on WEDNESDAY, April 13, 1864, at 12 o'clock P. M., upon the premises, the farm contains 100 acres, one-half of a mile from the village of Glen Cove, L. I., and two miles from the steamboat landing, from which there is daily communication by steamboat with New-York. The farm contains about 100 acres, about 12 acres of which is woodland, and the balance is in a high state of cultivation. The land farm is at present occupied by Mr. Full bearing; also, a plentiful supply of pears, cherries and small fruits. The buildings consist of a substantial dwelling-house, barn and hovels nearly new, with the usual outbuildings. Few farms are better supplied with water than this. To any person desiring a choice farm, the opportunity cannot be not offered. Terms on day of sale. Apply to R. C. MORRIS, Esq., President Columbian Marine Ins. Co., Wall, corner of Nassau-st., or to WM. M. WEEKS, at the Executor, ISAAC COLES, Glen Cove, L. I.

FARM FOR SALE—COMPRISING 100 ACRES, located in one of the most fertile districts of Central New-York, between Syracuse and Cayuga Lake, and accessible by railroad to Syracuse (seven miles) or by steamboat to Tramansburgh Landing (four miles.) The dwelling-house is one of the largest and most commodious in that portion of the country. The other buildings are numerous, containing tenant-house, two barns, carriage-house, ice-house, &c. The land is very fertile, level and free from stumps or other incumbrances. Persons wishing to purchase for permanent occupation or for Summer residence, will find in this property a desirable field for investment. For additional information, inquire of SAMUEL BROWN, Seamen's Friend Society, No. 80 Wall-st., New-York.

FURNISHED HOUSE TO LET AND FARM FOR SALE.—The residence of the late John H. Purdy, Esq., 1½ miles from the New-York and New-Haven Railroad depot at Rye. The house is large and convenient; comfortably furnished; there is a carriage house, barn, and other outbuildings, garden, &c.; more land would be let if wanted. The farm contains 120 acres of land; tolerable improvements would be sold at a bargain. Apply to W. H. PARSONS & BRO., No. 76 Duane-st., or of JOHN PALMER, near the premises.

FOR SALE.—A FARM OF ABOUT 232 ACRES IN the town of Hyde Park, Dutchess County, New-York, near the depot; well wooded and watered, with stock and farming utensils. Terms very easy. Apply to L. HURST, No. 132 Broadway, New-York.

FOR SALE—A FARM ON LONG ISLAND, three miles north of Suffolk Station; new dwelling-house, 1 first-class outbuildings, two fish-ponds, &c., and 1 first-class strawberry ground. For particulars, apply to G. C. & E. J. GENET, No. 10 Pine-st.

TO LET OR FOR SALE—A FARM OF FIFTY acres, nine miles from City Hall, New-York. Excellent for gardening. Rent $300 a year. Immediate possession given. Apply to J. P. MANN, No. 22 West 41st-st., New-York.

FOR SALE—THE WHOLE OR PART OF A farm, containing 100 acres, situated about 21 miles from the City, on the New-York and New-Haven Railroad. The dwelling, farm-house and other buildings in good order. Apply at No. 343 Bowery, corner 3d-st.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

THE REBELLION.

A rumor was current in Washington, yesterday, derived from rebel sources, that Charleston was attacked by our forces on Friday; that the attack was overwhelmingly successful, and that the city has fallen. There is a possibility that the rumor is true. A rebel dispatch, received via Fortress Monroe, announces the landing of our forces on Seabrook's Island, and the driving in of the rebel pickets.

Our Washington correspondent sends us a report that the rebel Gen. LEE, with a considerable force, is in the Shenandoah Valley. Prisoners are said to have been captured by our forces with passes bearing his signature. We are furnished with no other proof of his presence there. Everything is reported quiet with the Army of the Potomac—the only episode of interest being the capture of a rebel scouting party of twelve men a few days ago at Catlett's Station. The rebel cavalry commanders, HAMPTON and FITZHUGH LEE, are said to be at Culpepper with some 2,500 men. The only rebel forces between Washington and the Rappahannock, are MOSEBY'S guerrillas.

News from the Southwest points to the possibility of the abandonment of the Mississippi by the rebels. Telegrams are said to have been received from Gen. HURLBUT at Memphis, Gen. ASHOTH at Columbus, and Gen. DODGE at Corinth, reporting that there is a heavy force of rebel cavalry on the Tennessee River in the vicinity of Florence, and that the rebels are constructing bridges and floats for crossing the Tennessee in that neighborhood—indicating either a movement of BRAGG in that direction, or a movement of the Vicksburgh ARMY to join BRAGG. Meantime, Gen. GRANT appears to have given up the idea of capturing Vicksburgh by engineering strategy, and to have commenced preparations for its reduction in the regular way. He has placed a battery of eighty-four-pounder Parrotts in a position to reach the city easily, and had already, at last accounts, succeeded in silencing one of the rebel batteries—probably the one commanding the lower end of the canal. The return of the Steele's Bayou expedition to Young's Point, is announced in our correspondent's letter. It is likely that the Yazoo Pass expedition has also returned. The rebel gunboat Vicksburgh is reported to have been captured by Admiral FARRAGUT, she having broken from her moorings in a storm and floated down the river.

The Government has been taking up all the boats upon which it could lay its hands in the Ohio and Mississippi, and sending them to Gen. GRANT, for what purpose is not certainly known.

We learn from Murfreesboro, Tennessee, of a brilliant skirmish which took place at Woodbury, on the 15th inst. An expedition, consisting of Infantry and cavalry, started with the intention of capturing a rebel force, 600 strong, at that place. The infantry succeeded in surrounding the rebel camp; but the cavalry, being too eager, dashed in and frightened the foe so that a great portion of them succeeded in escaping. A number, however, were killed and wounded, and some thirty were captured, together with fifty horses, a number of mules, four wagons, and the entire rebel camp. Our loss was only one man wounded. Another skirmish took place at Carthage on the 2d, in which twenty-five rebels were captured. The rebels are said to be erecting fortifications at Palmyra.

Reports from Columbus, Ky., say that 700 rebels were discovered on Friday marching toward Hickman, Ky., with the intention of taking that place. Gen. ASHOTH started down the river on Saturday with 600 men, and a larger force was ready to start at a moment's notice.

That there is a "Peace Party" in the South, notwithstanding the denials of the rebel leaders, is evidenced by the following item from a Southern paper which has recently found its way North:—"The Peace Party of the South, headed by HENRY S. FOOTE, ALEXANDER MOSLEY, editor of the Richmond Whig, and others, are about to introduce a resolution on the subject [of peace] which will probably pass the lower House of Congress before the adjournment. It is said that the course of the Richmond Enquirer is disapproved of by many of the leading members of the Confederate Congress."

Eight millions of legal tender were converted into 5-20 year bonds during the past week. An average of over a million a day.

THE STATE LEGISLATURE.

In the Senate, on Saturday, the Gold bill was made the special order for Tuesday. The bill providing $4 per month for the families of drafted men, was referred to the Judiciary Committee, to report complete. The Senate adjourned until Tuesday.

In the Assembly, Mr. T. C. FIELDS, rising to a question of privilege, proposed to offer a resolution, instructing the Callicot Committee to admit certain evidence ruled out by the majority of the Committee. The Speaker ruled the question as not a privileged one, and refused to receive the resolution. The point was debated at considerable length, and finally the decision of the Chair was sustained, 49 to 33. The Assembly then adjourned.

GENERAL NEWS.

By the arrival at this port of the steamship Northern Light, from Aspinwall on the 26th ult., we receive interesting news from the Isthmus, and from Central and South America. The treasure list of the Northern Light is a very light one. News had reached Aspinwall from Greytown, by the British steamer Tasier, that the Government of Nicaragua had seized all the steamers, warehouses, provisions and other property belonging to the Nicaragua Transit Company, on the ground that the Company had violated their contract, and thus forfeited it. It was understood in Aspinwall that the default in the Company was in the non-payment of five or six thousand dollars due the Government. An agent of the Company had arrived at Aspinwall to ask assistance in the matter from United States ships of war. A full statement of the circumstances attending the seizure will be found in the deposition of the agent, given in our correspondent's letter. It was considered doubtful whether the passengers coming down from San Francisco would be allowed to cross Nicaragua, in which case they would be compelled to proceed to Panama. There were no later news from Europe. All hostilities had ceased between New-Granada and Ecuador, in consequence of the cordially notice of the latter against Mosquera. There were some apprehensions of a war. News from Guatemala and Salvador is to the 12th ult. President CARRERA, of Guatemala, had reached his capital after his defeat and retreat, with some 3,000 men, leaving 1,500 men as a corps of observation near the frontier. He lost in the battle of the 24th of February at least 600 men. It was thought that a settlement would be made between the two Governments. Nicaragua had suspended friendly relations with Salvador. The news from the States further South—Peru, Bolivia, Chili, etc.—is without importance.

On the afternoon of 10th March a fire occurred at Balize, Honduras, which continued until the night of the 11th, destroying 500 buildings in the business part of the city.

The election in Connecticut takes place today; and the following are the tickets which are in nomination:

	Union Ticket.	Democratic Ticket.
Governor	W. A. Buckingham.	T. H. Seymour.
Lieut.-Governor	Roger Averill.	J. A. Hovey.
Sec. of State	J. Hammond Trumbull.	J. H. Hoyt.
Treasurer	G. W. Coltz.	A. N. Ellsworth.
Comptroller	L. W. Cutler.	L. E. Baldwin.

The New-Albany (Ind.) Ledger says that it is ascertained to be a practice among dishonest army Paymasters to conceal from the soldiers the dates when they are likely to be in funds, in order that a set of rascally brokers may be "run in" on them to cash their orders at a ruinous discount. This villainy has been practiced even when the Paymaster has been in receipt of his funds from the Department, and the soldiers have been thus cruelly plundered of large amounts which would otherwise have gone to the relief of their families.

On Saturday the Stock Market was much excited on Harlem Stock, of which over 30,000 shares were sold, chiefly for cash, first at 63@61@60 ▼ cent., and late in the afternoon at 56@57¼ ▼ cent. The rest of the market steady. Gold Coin 154¾ at the close. Exchange 169@170 ▼ cent.

A very moderate business was transacted in Flour and Wheat on Saturday; prices were quite firm. Corn was in more request, and closed buoyantly. Pork was rather freely purchased, while other kinds of provisions, as well as groceries, Whisky, Hides, Leather, Oils, Metals, Tobacco, and Naval Stores were quiet. Cotton was depressed and lower. Tallow and foreign Wool were more sought after, the latter chiefly on speculation. Limited freight engagements were effected; with 451 vessels of all classes in port.

Report of the War Committee.

We surrender a large part of our space, this morning, to the unanimous report of the Congressional Committee on the Conduct of the War. It is an able, interesting and important document. It throws a flood of light on the history of the contest, and must go far toward settling the public judgment concerning many points on which public sentiment has hitherto been divided.

The leading topic of discussion in the report is the failure of the Army of the Potomac to achieve the results which the country had a right to expect from it. It was the largest army ever seen on this continent, composed of the best possible material, splendidly equipped, well disciplined, and competent, apparently, to accomplish anything which could reasonably be expected from any army in the world. Why, then, has it accomplished absolutely nothing? We think the country and the world, in view of the facts stated in this report, sustained as we assume them to be by the evidence accompanying it, must come, however reluctantly, to the conclusion that the failure of this army has been due wholly and exclusively to the incompetency of its Commanding General; and those who do not adopt this explanation, must fall back upon one infinitely less to his credit, namely, that Gen. McCLELLAN did not think the country was to be served and the Union saved by crushing the rebel armies, and that he acted upon this conviction, rather than upon his duty and his orders as a military commander. We can see no escape from one of these two conclusions. The attempts made so steadily and perseveringly by his friends to throw the responsibility of his failures upon the Government are utterly futile and absurd. There is not a single instance in which it can be made to appear even plausible for a moment, that the Administration has withheld from him any support which he needed and could receive, or that there has been in any quarter or at any time, the slightest disposition to interfere with any of his plans which looked toward a vigorous prosecution of the campaign. On the contrary, we do not believe history shows an instance in which a commanding officer in the field has been so earnestly, so cordially and so steadily sustained by his Government, as was Gen. McCLELLAN during the whole time he was in command of the Army of the Potomac.

We are somewhat surprised to find throughout Gen. McCLELLAN'S correspondence with the Government, constant evidence of a consciousness on his part that he was not doing what was expected at his hands, and that he must shield himself at all hazards from the responsibility of failures even before they had occurred. He puts forth one constant, steady call for reinforcements—wherever he is or whatever he has to do, before a victory and after a defeat, at every step on the Peninsula, before he had fought the enemy in Maryland and after he had beaten him at Antietam,—without any regard, apparently to the numbers he already had or to those of the enemy he had to meet. It seems as if he had started with the theory that by such a course he could clear himself of all blame in any event,—that in case of defeat he could point to the fact of his incessant calls for more troops as proof of his sagacity, and in case of success he could claim the greater credit for having achieved it with an inferior force. This habit reaches its climax when after the battle of Antietam he asked that Washington might be stripped of troops—even if it should be taken in consequence thereof—to reinforce his army, that he might fortify himself at Harper's Ferry, and repel the rebels if they should attempt to cross into Maryland again!

We have not been able, as our readers know, since the retreat of the army to the James River, after the seven days' battles before Richmond, to adhere to the opinion we had previously entertained of Gen. McCLELLAN'S fitness for so high a command. But we never anticipated so signal and so startling a demonstration of his incapacity as is afforded in the pages of this report. It is easier, we are well aware, to criticise a campaign after it is ended than to conduct it, and every General doubtless sees many points after the event in which he might have done better than he did. But it seldom happens that in no single instance could he possibly have done worse; and yet we cannot recall a solitary movement of any importance in Gen. McCLELLAN'S campaign which does not seem to have been precisely the worst that the case allowed.

Without entering at present upon any detailed examination of the points which warrant so sweeping a condemnation as this, we desire to call attention to one feature of the report which merits notice. A great deal has been said about President LINCOLN'S presumptuous interference with Gen. McCLELLAN'S movements in the field, and it has become popular in certain quarters to attribute the ill-success of the Army of the Potomac to this cause. The Report embodies a good deal of Mr. LINCOLN'S correspondence with Gen. McCLELLAN, and of his orders concerning military matters; and so far as a general comprehension of results and an estimate of the measures requisite to attain them is concerned, they show the President to be, as a military man, infinitely Gen. McCLELLAN'S superior. His letters and orders are marked always by clear, practical good sense, and evince a just apprehension of what each emergency required, which we fail to detect in the action or the writing of his subordinate.

It will be noticed that the Committee attribute the loss of the battle of Fredericksburgh, fought by Gen. BURNSIDE, to the failure of Gen. FRANKLIN to make the attack on the rebel right with the force and vigor required by his orders. The general statement of facts, contained in this Report, in regard to this battle, as well as the whole of BURNSIDE'S campaign on the Rappahannock, concurs entirely with those made in the editorial correspondence of the TIMES from that army; and this conclusion of the Committee in regard to Gen. FRANKLIN is also the same as was then expressed. We modified our estimate of the blame to be attached to that General, after reading the orders under which he acted; and we feel bound to say that we now see no sufficient reason for the severe censure expressed in this report. Gen. FRANKLIN acted upon what seemed to him the proper construction of his orders. The Committee hold that if he had put another construction upon them and acted accordingly, he might have won the day. We think this is very likely; but taking the language of the order into consideration, we do not think him censurable for not having construed it as Gen. BURNSIDE said after the battle he intended it to have been understood.

We shall have occasion hereafter, without doubt, to recur to many of the points involved in this report.

The Essential Barbarism of the Rebel Spirit.

The Secretary of War has done an excellent thing in subjecting the lately released survivors of the expedition, dispatched last year by Gen. MITCHEL to destroy the communications on the Georgia State Railroad, to a regular legal examination by Judge-Advocate HOLT, in order that the almost incredible atrocities of the rebels in this case might authentically go forth to the judgment of the world. The Northern mind has become so familiar with the essential barbarism of the ruling spirit of the Confederacy, that those individual instances make but comparatively a slight impression upon it. It learns that twenty-two soldiers, engaged in a work accounted perfectly legitimate in all warfare, being discovered and fleeing to the woods, were hunted down by bloodhounds—that one of them, a youth of eighteen, was stripped by a rebel officer and soldiers, and received on the bare back more than one hundred lashes of a raw-hide, because he would make no disclosures involving his comrades—that, after being robbed of their money by rebel officers, they were thrust into the negro jail of Chattanooga, semi-subterranean, its only entrance a trap-door in the ceiling, and so small that all could not lie down together, so ill-ventilated that they had often to strip themselves entirely of clothing to bear the heat; swarming, too, with vermin, all handcuffed, and all bound to each other by trace chains around their necks; that, after enduring the most horrid sufferings, eight of them, contrary to every rule of war, were hung, and that others would have probably shared the same fate had they not managed to escape. The Northern mind, we say, has long since learned to expect such things, from what it knows to be the utter depravity of the rebel character. But the European people do not know it. They will not believe it except upon the most conclusive evidence. It is well, then, that the proof should be presented in the unquestionable form Judge HOLT has given it.

It will not answer for Europeans to attribute these barbarous practices to the American nature. This war, from the outset has been waged on the loyal side, with greater humanity than has ever been exhibited in any war of modern times. The Government has uniformly erred in being too lenient. It has kept as far this side of the line of military law and usage, as its rebel enemies have kept beyond it. The great difficulty has been in getting the northern heart to sanction even the slight severity toward the rebels that sound military policy absolutely required. No rebel spy was ever executed. No rebel prisoner ever failed of being lodged and fed as comfortably as our own soldiers. Not an instance can be named in which a man of them ever received personal violence or personal insult. The rebel sympathizers in Europe, we know, tried to make much of the shooting of the captured guerrillas by Gen. McNEIL, of Missouri; but they were very careful to suppress the essential fact that those guerrillas were taken in arms after having given their parole, their lives having thus been regularly forfeited by universal military law. The very fact that they sought to make so much of that case by perversion and suppression, showed how hard they were pushed to establish anything against the North calculated to excite European indignation. The outrages in this war are all rebel outrages; and, beyond that, they are in no measure American.

The truth is—and Europeans cannot too well understand it—that the treason against this Government has transformed the very natures of the traitors engaged in it. From its very incipient stage it has been a master passion, which has fired every soul, high and low, with a wickedness almost infernal. Thus officials, in the very highest posts of Government, the confidential advisers of the President himself, plotted for months to give rebellion a foothold—bankrupting the public treasury, embezzling the public funds, misplacing the public arms, deranging the public service, betraying their public trusts in every manner that could inflict calamity and disgrace. Thus Senators and Representatives in the Capitol vented treason with the remorseless audacity of a Cataline, while yet under the awful sanction of an oath to support the Constitution of the United States. Thus thousands, in every grade of office in the Southern States, without resignation, alienated their trusts from the Government which conferred them, and to which they had sworn to be faithful unto the service of another Government of utterly antagonistic origin and authority. It was, in the beginning, hardly conceivable how human nature, depraved as it is, could be capable of such sweeping perjury. But the long train of subsequent crimes and barbarities followed only in strict consistency, whether taking the form of scourging and hanging prisoners of war—or burying men alive in dens worse than the grave—or converting the bones of our dead into pipes, and rings, and cups—or leaving our dead unburied, though encamped for months in their vicinity—or neglecting and maltreating our wounded—or employing Indians, with tomahawks and scalping knives, as allies—or poisoning wells—or laying mines for wholesale destruction—or murdering pickets. This fiendishness of the rebel spirit has manifested itself as well toward Southern loyalists as toward Northern. When the history of this war comes to be written, it will probably contain no chapter so thick with horrors as that which shall tell of the cruelties inflicted upon the Southern men and women who refused to abjure their Federal allegiance. But more than that, these Southern traitors show a barbarous spirit even toward those who agree with them in treason. We hear continually that in their spoliation and destruction of property, they make no difference between loyalist and rebel. The same havoc sweeps all. Wherever the rebel spirit displays itself, it is as ruthless, as in the beginning it was false.

The outside world has heretofore, for the most part, considered the accounts of these multiform outrages, as published in our newspapers, to be misrepresentations, instigated by malice and hate. Had the Government taken the pains from the outset officially to authenticate these atrocities, as it has in this case, the public mind of Europe long ere this would have been disabused of a vast deal of its misconception of the real character of the rebellion.

AMUSEMENTS.

The matinée on Saturday brought Mr. MAZURKA'S fourth week to a brilliant termination, and, we are surprised to hear, without any loss to the management. Mr. MAZURKA has suffered from a multitude of evils that are hardly likely to occur again. His singers have been sick, the weather has been bad, and on one occasion he was compelled from these combined causes to close the house. The religious austerities of the season have also probably had some influence on the attendance, although it must be confessed that the irreligious, who have no austerities, turned out in great force whenever the opera was attractive. The present week will probably be marked by moderation in the weather, and "perfect looseness" in the morals of the community. Unfortunately it is the last of Mr. MAZURKA'S present campaign—that otherwise sensible impresario being possessed with the amiable mania of visiting Boston. Why do people visit Boston, when Boston so frequently visits New-York, and stays on the slightest provocation? GRAU has been to Boston, and has acquired a deep bass voice in consequence. The Common sits heavily on his mind, and the east wind has taken up quarters in his throat. He is now fit for stratagems and spoils and—Philadelphia—whither he has gone. But how will Mr. MAZURKA, with his newly acclimated artists, withstand the dire influences of a Massachusetts Spring; and why should he ride Quixotically at the three hills when it is so much easier to stay in Fourteenth-street and grow opulent and easy? To the non-managerial intellect it seems slightly absurd to leave the Metropolis at a time when success is most marked and certain. The arrangements for the present week are as follows: To-night, FERRABELLA'S new opera of "Ione" will be produced for the first time in America. The work has been played in Europe with great success, and during Mr. MAZURKA'S last season it was produced in Havana and created a perfect furore there. New scenery and costumes have been prepared, and the distribution includes the names of Mme. MENONI, Mlle. SULZER, Signor MARCHESI, Signor BELLINI, Signor BIACHI, Signor RUNCIO, Herr MULLER and Mme. FIORENZA. "Ione," if successful, will probably be repeated during the remaining performances of the week.

The public will hear with much satisfaction that Mr. ANDREWS has returned to the City, and has made an arrangement with Mr. MAZURKA, by which he will be able to give two performances of German opera at the Academy of Music during the present week. These will take place on Thursday and Saturday, when two of the most successful productions of the German repertoire, "Fidelio" and "Der Freischutz," will be played.

The theatrical announcements for to-night are as follows: At Wallack's Theatre, BOUCICAULT'S comedy of "Love and Money;" at Laura Keene's Theatre, a new Irish drama, called "Bantry Bay; or, Ireland in 1798," will be brought out for the first time; the comedy of "Nature and Art" will also be played; at Niblo's Garden, Miss MARIANA HERON continues her remarkable performance of "Edith;" at the Winter Garden, Miss LUCILLE WESTON'S engagement has been prolonged for another week, and "Rip Van Winkle" retains its place on the bills; at Barnum's Museum, Mr. SAMUEL EMERY appears as Giles, the miller's man, in the domestic drama called the "Miller's Maid;" the extravaganza of "Love in all Corners" will also be given, and the multitudinous attractions of the Museum are thrown in for the benefit of visitors and the accumulation of postage currency.

Dr. COTTON announces another of his novel exhibitions at Cooper Institute for Wednesday next, when, in addition to the laughing Gas, Commodore NUTT and the "Old Folks" will assist. The Commodore has volunteered to inhale the gas.

Among the many interesting events of the present week, not the least important will be the renewal of Mr. GOTTSCHALK'S concerts at Irving Hall. They are, as heretofore, under the direction of Mr. HARRISON, and several artists new to our public will make their first appearance on these occasions. We hear also that Mr. GOTTSCHALK has prepared several novelties which he will introduce during the series. The first concert takes place to-morrow night.

The artists of M. JULIEN'S charming company, having returned from their trip in the East, will recommence operations at NIBLO'S on Monday next with FRENZLER'S comedy, "Peril on in Demerara." On Thursday an extra performance will be given for the benefit of Mlle. ANNA HERMANN.

Mr. GRAU and the artists of his fine troupe were in the City on Saturday, en route for Philadelphia, where they open tonight in DONIZETTI'S opera of "Linda di Chamounix." The present engagement is the farewell one of Miss KELLOGG, who has been engaged for Her Majesty's Theatre, London, and will take her departure during the present month.

Mr. BARNUM announces a National dog show, to take place at the Museum during the last week of the present month. Premiums will be paid for the best breeds of dogs. A week later Mr. BARNUM has a baby show, when premiums will be paid for the best breeds of babies.

IMPORTANT FROM WASHINGTON.

Lee Said to be in the Shenandoah Valley.

RETURN OF DESERTERS TO THE ARMY.

OUR SPECIAL WASHINGTON DISPATCHES.

WASHINGTON, Sunday, April 5.

GEN. LEE IN THE SHENANDOAH VALLEY.

Gen. LEE, with a considerable force, is in the Shenandoah valley. Prisoners captured by our troops have been found with passes bearing his signature.

RETURN OF DESERTERS.

The President's Proclamation has caused the return of upward of fifteen hundred deserters daily to their regiments. Thus far no impediments have been thrown in the way of enforcing the Proclamation. Notwithstanding the time laid down in the Proclamation for the return of deserters has expired, the Government is disposed to deal leniently with all who return to their regiments.

THE WAR COMMITTEE.

The War Committee has closed its labors, and the members will leave for their homes in a few days. Gen. HOOKER yesterday sent up a boat to bring down the members of the Committee to Aquia Creek, but, through some blunder, they were not notified in time, and the trip was abandoned.

LETTERS-OF-MARQUE.

The Committee on the Conduct of the War urged on the President, yesterday, the issuance of letters-of-marque. The subject was the occasion of a protracted Cabinet meeting afterward, in which two Department heads were as positively opposed to the measure as others were in favor of it. The conclusion was deferred.

ARREST OF A MARYLAND SECESSIONIST IN NEW-YORK.

A notorious Secessionist, named Gen. WILLIAMSON, formerly Attorney-General of Maryland, was arrested yesterday, by order of Judge Advocate TURNER, in New-York, while on his way from Canada to Richmond. On searching his baggage a large number of letters were found, showing conclusively that he was in correspondence with the rebels, and involving prominent parties in New-York and Baltimore. He was sent to Fort Lafayette.

DISTRICT-ATTORNEY FOR FLORIDA.

CALVIN P. CHAMBERLAIN, of New-York City, formerly of Buffalo, has been appointed United States District-Attorney for the Northern District of Florida.

GEN. HOOKER'S WAR HORSE.

The war horse presented to Gen. HOOKER was the gift of GEORGE WILKES, and was delivered by MARCUS C. SHANLY.

DEATH OF AN INDIAN CHIEF.

YELLOW WOLF, Chief of the Iowa tribe of Indians, and an eloquent Indian orator, died here, last evening, of pneumonia, and was buried, to-day, in the Congressional Cemetery. His last moments were spent in advising his companions to live in peace with the whites.

THE RECENT POINT PLEASANT AFFAIR.

GEN. SCHENCK'S HEADQUARTERS, BALTIMORE, April 4, 1863.

Maj.-Gen. George H. W. Halleck, General-in-Chief:

I have now, through Brig.-Gen. SCAMMON, Capt. CARZER's account of the Point Pleasant affair. Capt. CARZER had sixty-three men. He reports two killed, three wounded and six taken prisoners, making our total loss eleven. The rebels lost in killed, wounded and prisoners, seventy-two, and so their raid with their largely superior numbers, was handsomely repulsed.

ROBERT S. SCHENCK, Maj.-Gen. Comd'g.

INTERESTING FROM MEXICO.

A Letter from President JUAREZ—Desertions from the French Army.

The following is a translation of a letter from President JUAREZ denying the charge made by Marshal O'DONNELL, in the Spanish Cortes, that President JUAREZ, had been willing to sell a portion of the territory of Mexico to the United States:

NATIONAL PALACE, MEXICO, Feb. 22, 1863.

To the Editor of the Diario Oficial:

MY DEAR AND MOST ESTEEMED SIR: I have just read in the Monitor Republicano of to-day, the speech which M. O'DONNELL, President of the Council of Ministers of the Spanish Government, has made with the purpose of answering the speech of the Queen, and I have seen with surprise, among several accurate assertions which M. O'DONNELL has made about Mexican affairs, the following expressions: * * * "As for myself, JUAREZ, as a Mexican, has a fault which cannot be overlooked—that of having been willing to sell two provinces of his country to the United States. * * * This accusation, coming from a high functionary of a nation, and while an eminently serious and solemn act was taking place, when the statesman must be careful that his words are impressed with the seal of truth, of justice and good faith, is of the utmost importance, lest one may be led to think that on account of the position which he occupies, he is in possession of documents which support his assertion; a thing which is not true. M. O'DONNELL is authorized to publish the proofs he may possess concerning this affair. Meanwhile my honor compels me to show that M. O'DONNELL has made a mistake in the judgment which he has formed of my official conduct, and you are authorized, Mr. Editor, to contradict the imputation which has been made with so much injustice to the first magistrate of the nation.

I am, Mr. Editor, your humble servant,

(Signed) BENIT JUAREZ.

DESERTIONS FROM THE FRENCH ARMY IN MEXICO.

The following letter was addressed to the Mexican Government by a number of the soldiers of the French Army in Mexico, who had deserted, and reached the City of Mexico as they were about proceeding further into the interior. These deserters also state that forty of them left the French camp together, but that they were overtaken, and a part recaptured.

The French Soldiers Arrived at the Capital to the Mexican Government:

MONSIEUR LE PRESIDENT: We would not like to leave your Capital without an acknowledgment of our gratitude for the kind treatment which we have received up to the present time from the Government you have the honor to represent.

Since the day we left the invading army, where we were told that all French deserters had to suffer the most cruel tortures from the Mexican people, we have seen that it was a shameful lie; for, wherever we have passed, we have been received with the greatest regard, even from the superior officers, who have hastened to aid us, offering us their services, and showing that they have for us the sincerest sympathies.

Receive, MONSIEUR LE PRESIDENT, our heartfelt thanks.

Done at MEXICO, the 14th February, 1863.

VERY IMPORTANT REBEL NEWS.

CHARLESTON SAID TO HAVE FALLEN.

Landing of Our Forces on Seabrook's Island.

WASHINGTON, Sunday, April 5.

The city is severe to-night over news, derived from rebel sources, that Charleston has fallen; that our attack commenced on Friday, and was overwhelmingly successful.

A flag of truce came to Falmouth this morning. The newspapers smuggled under it made no mention of the fall of Charleston, or of its evacuation.

NEWS VIA FORTRESS MONROE.

FORTRESS MONROE, Saturday, April 4.

Yesterday's Richmond Dispatch contains the following:

STARTLING FROM THE SOUTH CAROLINA COAST.

The enemy have landed in force on Seabrook's or John's Island. Three gunboats and several transports are lying off the island. Skirmishing has already taken place between our and the enemy's pickets. Our pickets are driven in and the enemy advancing.

Gen. HAYGOOD has ordered all the women, children and non-combatants removed from Adams' Run, which is twenty miles from Seabrook's Island.

The Dispatch also says: "Pensacola was fired by the Union soldiers about the 23d ult., and the most of the town destroyed. The soldiers are going to reinforce Gen. BANKS."

THE INVASION OF KENTUCKY.

Particulars of the Defeat of Pegram by Gen. Gilmore.

Dispatch to the Cincinnati Gazette.

LEXINGTON, Ky., April 5.

Gen. GILMORE and staff returned from the front last night, leaving Cols. RUNKLE and WOLFORD to pick up prisoners and bring up the rear.

Gen. PEGRAM'S long planned and boasted invasion of Kentucky has ended in a destructive and disgraceful defeat.

Gen. GILMORE assumed the command in person, and left here with the determination to recapture the earnings of the rebel expedition, and punish the audacity of the brigands.

Perceiving that they had converted a retreat into a precipitate flight, he left the infantry and pushed on with his mounted force, consisting of the First Kentucky cavalry, Col. WOLFORD'S; Forty-fifth O. V. I., mounted, Col. RUNKLE; a detachment of the Forty-fourth Ohio, mounted, under Maj. MITCHELL; and the Seventh O. V. cavalry, Col. GARRARD—in all 1,500 men. Such was the dashing energy of the pursuit, that, notwithstanding the rebels had thirty-six hours the start, they were overtaken four miles north of Somerset.

Gen. GARRARD, in command of 800 mounted men, had reached Buck Creek, twelve miles from Somerset, when Gen. GILMORE reached him with his body guard and the Seventh Ohio Cavalry, leaving behind the 1,200, with which they had marched until within reach of the enemy's rear guard. The skirmishing then commenced, Gens. GILMORE and GARRARD with WOLFORD and the body guard in the advance. As often as the rebels made a stand they were dislodged with shell. Within twelve miles of Somerset, at Dutton's Hill, in a very strong position, the rebels drew up in force and planted their batteries; and here, about 12 o'clock, commenced the real battle. Our line of battle was drawn up, with the batteries in the centre, supported by the Seventh Cavalry, (RUNKLE,) with a detachment of the Forty-fourth and Forty-fifth on the left, and WOLFORD'S on the right. The preliminary artillery fight lasted one and a half hours, and resulted in the dismounting of three of their guns.

The wings were then ordered to advance. WOLFORD did so, wounded. RUNKLE dismounted and found it too hot, but when the enemy found him out and commenced shelling, he threw aside all hesitation, and at the head of his men, gallantly charged up the hill. The rebels moved out to meet him. For an instant his line wavered, with batteries playing directly upon them, shot and shell bursting over them, and leaden rain playing with deadly music around them. They paused, however, only to take breath, and with one intent and a single shout, they hurled their column upon the advancing foe. Col. RUNKLE and his command behaved like veterans.

At the same time WOLFORD, on the right, and Col. GARRARD, in the centre, charged, and the enemy broke in disorder to their horses, under cover of the wooded hill, and fled pell mell through the town. Capt. STOWE, with a detachment of the Forty-fourth, was ordered forward to reconnoiter. A body of SCOTT'S and AMES'S rebel cavalry were here detected in a flank movement on WOLFORD. Col. SAMUELS hastened to reinforce, and after a short, sharp and decisive conflict, captured sixty prisoners, and put them to root. A detachment of SCOTT'S men were seen flying into the road to cut off Capt. STOWE, when Gen. GILMORE, at the head of his body guard, charged down upon them like a whirlwind, and they turned off another road. Gen. GILMORE and guard entered the town, and held it until the Forty-fourth and Forty-fifth came up.

The enemy made another stand three miles below Somerset, and were again routed.

Night now came on, and our boys were exhausted. In the morning it was found the rebels had crossed the river during the night in great confusion. More than 100, it is said, were drowned. They planted a battery on the river, which was quickly demolished.

We recovered 400 cattle at the river. Their loss in killed and captured is nearly 500, of whom 30 were killed.

The loss on our side is but 20 killed, wounded and missing.

The shot mostly passed over the heads of our men. The whole affair was brilliant and dashing—1,500 to 3,500, led by the Generals in person. A surgeon, under a flag of truce, was searching for Gen. PEGRAM after the battle.

Accident to the New-York and Washington Express Train.

ONE MAN KILLED AND SIX WOUNDED.

BALTIMORE, Sunday, April 5.

The express train from Washington for New-York, came in collision with a train which had broken down, last night, near Calverton viaduct, a few miles from Baltimore. One was killed and six were wounded, all employes of the road. The passengers were not hurt. The train was delayed three hours. Owing to the storm, the signals were not seen in time to prevent the collision.

Letter from Mr. Belmont.

No. 109 FIFTH-AVENUE, Friday, April 3, 1863.

To the Editor of the Herald:

On my return from Cuba, after an absence of nearly two months, my attention has been called to two articles in your issues of to-day and yesterday, in which you quote me as one of the Democratic leaders and owners of the World newspaper. Permit me to say that I am not and never have been interested in the remotest way in the ownership of the World, nor have I ever exercised the slightest influence over its political character.

Neither do I claim the flattering title of a Democratic leader, though I am proud to say that for nearly a quarter of a century I have been an unwavering, though humble, supporter of that great party, and its national and conservative principles.

I beg also to state that I have never at any time or to anybody expressed myself in favor of a peace with the South, which had not for its fundamental basis the supremacy of the Government and the Union of all the States.

It will be impossible for you or any other man to point to a single word or act of mine, ever since the beginning of our national troubles, which could bear any other construction than that of utter and uncompromising hostility to the wicked heresy of secession and of devoted loyalty to the Constitution and the Union. Yours, very respectfully,

AUGUST BELMONT.

CELEBRATION OF EASTER SUNDAY.—The festival of Easter Sunday, commemorative of the resurrection of our Saviour, was celebrated in all the Catholic and Episcopal churches of the City and Brooklyn yesterday, with more than the usual magnificence of decoration and ceremony. The floral display and other ornamentation was particularly fine.

OPERATIONS ON THE MISSISSIPPI.

The Return of the Steele's Bayou Expedition to Young's Point.

THE LOSS OF THE RAM LANCASTER.

From Our Own Correspondent.

YOUNG'S POINT, NEAR VICKSBURGH, Saturday, March 28, 1863.

My last of the 25th was dated at the mouth of Deer Creek, since which the entire expedition has returned to this place. The operation of reëmbarking the forces was commenced day before yesterday, and completed yesterday morning, without annoyance from the enemy, who, although in the vicinity in considerable force, could not attack us without coming directly under the guns of the dreaded gunboats. Experience has made such positions particularly unpleasant to the chivalry; and hence they confined their hostility to crawling through the canebrakes and at safe distance taking long shots at our pickets. One cavalier alone was seen—he was mounted, and armed cap-à-pie (that is, with a double-barreled shot gun, blue kettle, pair of jeans, slouch hat and suit of butternut)—and he rode boldly toward our lines, urged probably by the irresistible spirit of chivalry to cook some daring adventure. However, as he, upon suddenly finding himself in close and dangerous proximity to a party of Federal pickets, turned tail and fled with most unchaplike celerity, it may be conjectured that his heart failed him at the moment when he should have astonished the world with his daring.

The troops were all embarked at once—those that could not get upon transports were taken upon the gunboats, and thus no portion of the army was left. Not the least troublesome portion of the labor was getting the contrabands on board. A large number had been taken up as laborers, to whom large additions were made from negroes who followed our troops on their return from the expedition up Deer Creek. Probably there were in all not less than five hundred, a fair proportion of whom were women and children. All these were placed upon a coal-boat, and towed down the Bayou with a tug.

A painful accident occurred soon after the tug started. A dozen or so of the negroes had the small-pox, and, in order to keep them separate from the others, a small flat boat had been provided for them, which was towed astern of the coal barge. The barge had scarcely started ere the flat boat had turned bottom side up, and its contents were thrown into the water. The most strenuous exertions were instantly made to rescue the unfortunates, which resulted in saving all but three—these could not swim, and being unable to grasp anything, went down before boats could reach the spot. These drowned were all men, and colored—two white men who were in the boat drifted against a tree, and were saved.

Having no means of taking along those saved without risking their communicating the disease to others, they were left ashore, with directions to stay on the plantations until "we called for them next week."

The day before starting back Admiral Foxem received a dispatch from the acting commander of the fleet, informing him that the rams Switzerland and Lancaster had the morning before run the blockade, without receiving a single shot from the rebel batteries, and that he believed Vicksburgh to be evacuated. The Admiral instantly took a tug, and started down, probably revelling on his way in thoughts of taking possession of Vicksburgh, and the glory that would thereby accrue to the National arms in general, and the Western gunboat fleet in particular. He reached here in time to learn that the dispatch of his subordinate was in most respects incorrect. Vicksburgh was not evacuated, and the rams, instead of not receiving a shot, had been so vigorously shot at that the Lancaster had gone to the bottom of the Mississippi, and the Switzerland had drifted against the wood shore, a hopeless wreck.

The reaction upon the Commodore, who had just spent a fortnight in discovering the fact that the rebels had not left open a wide stream which runs to the centre of their position, must have been severe. Instead of Vicksburg being evacuated, he found it as strong, defiant, and full of harm as ever.

The mistake relative to the rebels not having fired upon the rams, appears to have arisen from the fact that nobody heard any cannonading at the time they were passing down the river. Taking these dates to start with, some genius has evolved the hypothesis that the rebels have discovered, or are using, some new explosive agent, whereby projectiles are sent through the air without noise; and this, I believe, is now the accepted conclusion of a majority of the army. Have the rebels learned to imprison the hitherto innocuous zephyrs of the sunny South, and turned their gentleness into a demon to hurl destruction upon the Yankee invader? or has the high-born southerner condescended to imitate the ingenious mandolin of science, by turning inventor, and hunting among the arcana of nature till he has found some new agent of death, whose mission is performed at once effectively and noiselessly; or what is it?

The loss of the Lancaster, although no small one, is not so bad as at first would seem. It is worth the loss of one such boat to secure another for the protection of FARRAGUT's boats below—in other words, the loss of the Lancaster is more than compensated in the fact that the Switzerland has gotten through in a condition which, although damaged, will admit of speedy repairs. There was imminent danger that FARRAGUT's boats might experience the fate of the Indianola, unless we secured her a ram. The Switzerland is probably one the repaired, and, with the other boats, will prove a formidable foe to the Internal Navy used by the rebels in Red River and the Lower Mississippi. Like the man, who, when he broke his leg, derived some consolation from the fact that it was not his neck, we can derive limited comfort in reflecting that, although we lost one valuable boat, we did not lose two.

This morning the Commissary steamer Mecosta, with three others, and an immense wharf boat loaded with provisions, just before daylight, broke their fastenings, and impelled by a swift current, started down the river. None of them had any steam. Vicksburgh was only six miles distant, and the river running like a mill race. One may be sure that there was hurrying to and fro, and an active demand for firemen, tar-pauline, anything that would make steam in the shortest possible space of time. I don't believe there is a case on record in which there was more excitement, hurrying, scurrying and rushing about, than there was for about thirty minutes on these four steamboats. Fortunately the last boat, which had come in the night before, had her fires still alive, and by active feeding succeeded in getting up sufficient steam to catch the wagons of the flotilla, when we had floated within about three miles of Vicksburgh. Had it not been for the fortunate accident of the Mecosta having some fire left, an immense amount of supplies, three steamers, a fine wharf-boat, and your correspondent, together with a good many other individuals, would at this moment have been at Vicksburgh.

For the present, I do not believe that the fleet will undertake anything of importance. Probably, the next news of stirring interest will be from below. GALWAY.

New York to be Invaded by Indians.

One would think that our domestic troubles are pretty numerous already, without an Indian invasion being added to the number. Such a contingency would scarcely seem possible, yet it is really very likely to happen. The Kiowas have made up their minds for it; so have the Cheyennes, and so have the Comanches. Here are the names of some of the chief warriors have come to our knowledge. The Cheyennes are to contribute their valiant WAR-BONNET and LEAN-BEAR; the Comanches are to be led by the heroic PARKER-FOREMAN, and the terrible TAU-BEAUX, and the Apaches are to be marshaled by the Antilles of the Far-West the renowned and unconquerable POOR-BEAR. We are informed that the Arapahoes are to be represented by the Scorpion-Weed, and the Kiowas by the YELLOW-BUFFALO. These, in fact, being the real Indian names of various representatives of the fiercest war-tribes of the remote bands of the Indian, who have recently come to Washington to arrange matters connected with the welfare of their several nations. Each is himself is a chief of great rank and standing. They have had an audience of the President, and have been duly flattered in Washington. Certain gentlemen from New-York have invited them to come hither, and that invitation has been accepted by Maj. COLONY, their agent. There are no squaws, consequently no pappooses; and the Indian affairs will be conducted sans of their respective tribes, present in all the trappings and the mysterious with all the paint which Indian fashions require. Whether our Common Council will fatten them or not we are not yet informed.

The Irish Relief Fund.

ARCHBISHOP HUGHES AND GEN. M'CLELLAN TO ADDRESS.

To-morrow night a grand ball in aid of the distressed people of Ireland will be given at the Academy of Music. The affair is gotten up under the auspices of many of our best known citizens and promises to be a great success. Archbishop HUGHES, and Gen. MCCLELLAN, whose Headquarters are in this city for the present will certainly be there, and it has been intimated that both of these gentlemen will be called upon for a speech. However that may be, the attractions are sufficiently great to fill the house to overflowing; the inducement of charity to the sufferers in Old Erin being of itself more than enough to fill high the strong box at the door.

The Central American Transit Company.

A CARD.

The Directors of the Central American Transit Company to its Stockholders:

The stockholders and others interested in the Central American Transit Company are cautioned against misrepresentations in the accounts brought from the Isthmus of Panama by the assembly Northern Light and published in yesterday morning's papers.

The charter of the Company with its concessions, obligations, rights and remedies, defines every possible relation between it and the Government of Nicaragua.

There is no right conceded to the Government of Nicaragua to seize and confiscate its property by an Executive act. It is strictly guarded against, and no forfeiture of our property is possible, except through the sentence and decree of a court of arbitration, to be formed on behalf of the City of Washington in the mode prescribed in the charter.

The Government of Nicaragua may legally occupy the vessels of the Company in certain contingencies to carry troops; but the cases are limited to foreign or civil war, and then only at such times as will not interfere with the California Transit, except when the Transit route itself should be invaded.

The act of seizure of the company's steamers may have reference possibly to the difficulty between Salvador and Guatemala, and its probable bearing upon Nicaragua. The Minister of War, by whose orders the seizure was made, appears to have assumed his authority, and, if so, has misconstrued his military rights in the question.

The rumors which were current at Panama, that the company had forfeited its rights, for some cause not stated, are mere rumors; but, whatever may have been the motive of the act of the Minister of War, the stockholders may rest assured that the Board of Directors are not cognizant of any act of omission or commission which could even call for the interference of the Court of Arbitration.

Difficulties have, no doubt, been brought to bear to check the rapid growth of this great national enterprise, which was fast assuming proportions of so important a character as to threaten the large interests which have so long enjoyed the monopoly of the great and growing trade between this and the Pacific coast. In this abrupt and unlawful interference with the property of our company the extent of this influence may also possibly be felt. It can have no permanent effect on the progress of the company.

The company have thus far fulfilled every obligation to the Government of Nicaragua, and established the line to California, via the Transit route of Nicaragua, upon a basis far more substantial than it ever was before, fully equal to the requirements of the public and the demands of its rapidly increasing trade, and with abundant power to compete successfully with any other organization.

The grant by the Government of Nicaragua to the Central American Transit Company is known to the Government of the United States as the only existing one entitled to the facilities of the route and to the protection of our Government. But the Board of Directors have the confident expectation that the difficulty is slight and will pass over without requiring the interference of our Government. We feel fully assured that nothing but good to the permanent interests of the company can result from the most searching scrutiny into its acts in Nicaragua.

The news coming through the channel of Panama has been much exaggerated. Our own letters leading to the conclusion that the Transit over Nicaragua will be made and all our property restored.

HENRY G. STEBBINS, President.

TELL THE TRUTH.—"Is your phrenological examinations, supposing you find the developments in such combination, that the person would, unless guarding himself, be likely to steal, rob, or murder, would you tell him so?" "And if so, would it not spoil your business?" These are questions put to us daily. In reply to the first, we say, yes, and to the second, no. Even a rogue respects an honest man, and will, nine times in ten, confess to a phrenologist his wicked ways. Are you an unbeliever? THE BEST SOAP IN USE.

E. MORGAN'S SONS'

PEARL

MOTTLED SOAP.

This Soap is, without doubt, the best and cheapest in use. It is manufactured from the best materials; and being entirely free from any of those injurious substances so often found in soap, we do not hesitate to pronounce it unequalled for washing linens and fine goods, or for family use of any kind. We have several other qualities of soaps which give the most unqualified satisfaction wherever used. Our house has been established upward of fifty years, and has a wide reputation for manufacturing only from the best materials.

was one not by a mere obstinate resistance on the part of the enemy, but it was not until 3 o'clock that the bridge was carried. By 3 o'clock Gen. Burnside's whole command had crossed and taken position on some elevated ground just above the bridge. He was then ordered to take the heights commanding the town of Fredericksburg, which was done after desperate fighting. By that time the enemy on our left had been reinforced by withdrawing some of their troops from opposite our right, where our advance had been checked, and Gen. Burnside was compelled to give up some of the heights he had succeeded in occupying. He had sent to Gen. McClellan for reinforcements, but received in reply that there were none to be had, but he must hold the bridge at all hazards.

The corps of Gen. Fitz-John Porter, in the centre, was not brought into action at all. Gen. Hooker believes that he had been given to understand that there were to be attacks made simultaneously on the right, centre and left of our army. He attacked at dawn, but Gen. Sumner, on the left, was not ordered to attack until 10 o'clock, and there was no attack made in the centre by Gen. Porter.

In regard to the manner of conducting the attack at Antietam, Gen. Sumner testifies:

"I have always believed that, instead of sending them across into that action in driblets as they were sent, if Gen. McClellan had authorized me to march their 40,000 men on the left bank of the enemy, we could not have failed to throw them right back in front of the other divisions of our army on our left—Burnside's, Franklin's and Porter's corps. As it was, we went in, division after division, until even one of my own divisions was forced out. The other two drove the enemy and held their position. My intention at the time was to have proceeded entirely on by their left and, move down, bringing them right in front of Burnside, Franklin and Porter.

Q.—And all escape for the enemy would have been impossible?

A.—I think so.

The battle closed at dark, our army having gained some little advantages, at a heavy loss, but nothing decisive. The attack was not renewed the next day, the enemy occupying the positions held by them at the close of the yesterday's battle.

In relation to the policy of renewing the attack on the day of the battle, Gen. McClellan testifies:

"The next morning (the 18th) I found that our loss had been so great, and there was so much disorganization in some of the commands, that I did not consider it proper to renew the attack that day, especially as I was sure of the arrival that day of two fresh divisions, amounting to about 15,000 men. As an instance of the condition of some of the troops that morning, I happen to recollect the return of the first corps, Gen. Hooker's—made the morning of the 17th, by which there were about 2,100 men reported present for duty. Four days after that the returns of the same corps showed 12,000.

"I had arranged, however, to renew the attack at daybreak on the 19th, but I learned some time during the night or early in the morning, that the enemy had abandoned his position. It afterwards proved that he moved with great rapidity, and, not being encumbered by wagons, was enabled to get his troops across the river before we could do him any serious injury. I think that, taking into consideration the time he had gone through, he got as much out of them in this Antietam campaign as human endurance would bear."

The testimony of Gen. Burnside, on the subject of renewing the attack upon the enemy the day after the battle, is as follows:

Q.—Did you express any opinion to Gen. McClellan, or to any one at headquarters, in relation to renewing the attack the next day; and if so, what opinion did you express?

A.—I did express an opinion to Gen. McClellan on the subject. After my command was all in position—say 8 o'clock at night—I went over to Gen. McClellan's headquarters at Keedysville, and expressed the opinion to Gen. Marcy, his chief of staff, that the attack ought to be renewed the next morning at 6 o'clock. I also expressed the same opinion to other members of Gen. McClellan's staff. Gen. Marcy told me that I ought to see Gen. McClellan and tell him what I thought of the matter, and I went into Gen. McClellan's tent, and in the course of the conversation I expressed the same opinion to him, and told him that if I could have 5,000 fresh troops to pass in advance of mine, I would be willing to commence the attack on the next morning. He said that he had been thinking the matter over and would make up his mind during the night, and if I would send a staff officer to his headquarters, to remain there over night, he would send me orders early in the morning; and if he concluded to renew the attack, he would then give me necessary aid. I did send the staff officer over, but Gen. McClellan concluded not to renew the attack the next day.

Q.—Would there have been any difficulty in furnishing the 5,000 fresh troops which you desired, as the corps of Gen. Fitz-John Porter, some 15,000 or 20,000 men, had not been engaged?

A.—There would have been no difficulty in furnishing the 5,000 fresh troops. In fact, Gen. McClellan did send Gen. Morell's division, of quite that strength, to report to me, but not with orders to me to renew the attack.

Gen. Franklin testifies.

Q.—Were you consulted in relation to renewing the attack the next day?

A.—When Gen. McClellan visited the right in the afternoon I showed him a position on the right of this wood I have already mentioned, in which was the Dunker Church, which I thought commanded the wood, and that if it could be taken we could drive the enemy from the wood by merely holding this point. I asked him that we should make the attack on that place the next morning, from Gen. Sumner's position. I thought there was no doubt about our being able to carry it. We had plenty of artillery bearing upon it. We drove the enemy from there that afternoon, and I had no doubt that we could take that place the next morning, and I thought that would uncover the whole left of the enemy.

Q.—If that had been made, and that point had been carried, what would have been the effect upon the enemy?

A.—It would have been very disastrous to them.

Q.—What reasons were given for not making the attack the next morning?

A.—I did not hear the direct reason of the General commanding, but I have understood that the reason was, that he expected some fifteen thousand new troops—those which would make the thing a certain thing—and he preferred to wait to make this attack on the right, until those new troops came.

Q.—And that delay gave the enemy an opportunity to escape?

A.—I think it did.

On the night of the 19th of September the enemy abandoned their position and retired across the Potomac into Virginia, without molestation. Our army slowly followed, and took up a position along the Potomac, on the Maryland side, occupying Maryland Heights on the 20th, and Harper's Ferry on the 22d.

Gen. McClellan, on the 29th of September, reports our losses at South Mountain at 2,325; at Antietam, 12,469—total losses in both battles, 14,794. In relation to the losses of the enemy in both those battles, in killed, wounded, prisoners and stragglers, Gen. McClellan says:

"It may be safely concluded, therefore, that the rebel army lost at least 30,000 of their best troops in their brief campaign in Maryland."

GEN. M'CLELLAN'S PLANS AND PURPOSES AFTER THE BATTLE OF ANTIETAM.

After the battle of Antietam Gen. McClellan called for reinforcements, and announced his determination to fortify Maryland Heights, making a requisition on Gen. Wadsworth, then in Washington, for 8,000 contrabands for that purpose. On the 27th of September he writes to Gen. Halleck:

"My present purpose is to hold the enemy about as it now is, rendering Harper's Ferry secure, and watching the river closely, intending to attack the enemy should he attempt to cross to this side. Our possession of Harper's Ferry gives us the great advantage of a secure debouche; but we cannot avail ourselves of it until the railroad bridge is finished, because we cannot otherwise supply a greater number of troops than we now have on the Virginia side at that point. When the river rises so that the enemy cannot cross in force, I purpose concentrating the army somewhere near Harper's Ferry, and then acting according to circumstances, viz: Moving on Winchester if, from the position and attitude of the enemy, we are likely to gain a great advantage by doing so; or else devoting a reasonable time to the organization of the army and instruction of the new troops preparatory to an advance on whatever line may be determined. In any event, I regard it as absolutely necessary to send new regiments at once to the old corps for purposes of instruction, and that the old regiments be filled at once.

* * * * * * *

My own view of the proper policy to be pursued is to retain in Washington merely the force necessary to garrison it, and to send everything else available to reinforce this army. The railroads give us the means of promptly reinforcing Washington, should it be necessary. If I am reinforced as I ask, and am allowed to take my own course, I will hold myself responsible for the safety of Washington."

On the 7th of October Gen. Halleck replies. After referring to the draft expected in some of the Northern States, he says:

"But you cannot delay the operations of the army for that draft. It must move, and the old regiments must remain in their crippled condition. The convalescents, however, will help a little. The country is becoming very impatient at the want of activity of your army, and we must push it on.

"I am satisfied that the enemy are falling back toward Richmond. We must follow them and rack to pieces them. There is a decided want of legs in our troops. They have too much immobility, and we must try to remedy the defect. I relieve that baggage and baggage trains will effect something; but the real difficulty is they are not sufficiently exercised in marching; they lie still in camp too long.

After a hard march, one day is time enough to rest; lying still beyond that time does not rest the men. If we compare the average distances marched per month by our troops for the last year with that of the rebels, or with European armies in the field, we will see why our troops march so better. They are not sufficiently exercised to make them good and efficient soldiers."

On the 1st of October, Gen. McClellan asked for authority to build a double track suspension bridge and a permanent wagon bridge across the Potomac at Harper's Ferry, which Gen. Halleck declined to give. About that time the President visited the army. After his return to Washington, the following order was sent to Gen. McClellan by Gen. Halleck:

WAR DEPARTMENT, WASHINGTON, D. C., Oct. 4, 1862.

I am instructed to telegraph you as follows: The President directs that you cross the Potomac, and give battle to the enemy or drive him south. Your army must move now, while the roads are good.

If you cross the river between the enemy and Washington, and cover the latter by your line of operations, you will be reinforced with 30,000 men. If you move up the Valley of the Shenandoah, not more than 12,000 or 15,000 can be sent to you. The President advises the interior line, between Washington and the enemy, but does not order it. He is very desirous that your army move as soon as possible. You will immediately report your views.

[illegible]

"After full consideration, I have decided to carry out the plan suggested by the President in his letter of the 13th instant, viz: to cross the Potomac on the enemy's flank. I will inform you from time to time of the progress of my march. Williamsport, Shepherdstown, Boonsboro, Hagerstown, Frederick, Harper's Ferry, and the Potomac are the points I now and for some time to come will have in view. Please direct the quartermaster to have a good supply of shoes and socks sent to me from Washington."

To this Gen. Halleck replied:

"Should you move as proposed in your telegram of yesterday, your communications will be from Washington to relieve you."

On the 26th of October Gen. McClellan telegraphs to Gen. Halleck a report of Col. Rensse Williams, commanding a detachment of cavalry, in which it is stated that nearly half of his horses are unsound, from "sore tongue, grease, and consequent lameness and sore backs," and that "the horses which are still sound are absolutely broken down from fatigue and want of flesh."

To this the President replies to Gen. McClellan on the same day:

"I have just read your dispatch about sore tongue and fatigued horses. Will you pardon me for calling that the horses of your army have done since the battle of Antietam that fatigues anything?"

Gen. McClellan replies on the same day:

"In reply to your telegram of this date, I have the honor to state, from the time this army left Washington, on the 7th of September, my cavalry has been constantly employed in making reconnoissances, scouting and picketing. Since the battle of Antietam six regiments have made a trip of 200 miles, marching 35 miles in one day, while endeavoring to reach Stuart's cavalry. Gen. Pleasonton, in his official report, states that he, with the remainder of our available cavalry, while on Stuart's track, marched 75 miles in 24 hours. Besides these two remarkable expeditions, our cavalry has been engaged in picketing and scouting 150 miles of river front since the battle of Antietam, and has made repeated reconnoissances since that time, engaging the enemy on every occasion, and, indeed, it has performed harder service since the battle than before. I beg that you will also consider that this same cavalry was brought from Pennsylvania, where it encountered no laborious service, and was at the commencement of this campaign, in low condition, and from that time to the present has had no time to recruit. If any instance can be found where overworked cavalry has performed more labious duty since the battle of Antietam I am not aware of it."

The following is the reply of the President:

"Yours, in reply to mine, about horses, received. Of course, you know the facts better than I. Still, two considerations remain: Stuart's cavalry outmarched ours, having only marched twice as much service as the Pennsylvania and everywhere else. Secondly, will not a movement of our army be a relief to the cavalry, compelling the enemy to concentrate instead of 'foraging' in squads everywhere?"

On the 27th of October, Gen. McClellan telegraphed to the President:

"Your Excellency is aware of the very great reduction of numbers that has taken place in most of the old regiments of this command, and how necessary it is to fill up these skeletons before taking them again into action. I urge, therefore, the movement that the order to fill up the old regiments with drafted men may at once be issued."

To this the President replies as follows, on the same day:

"Your dispatch of 3 P. M., of to-day, in regard to filling up old regiments with drafted men, is received, and the request therein shall be complied with as far as practicable.

"And now I ask a distinct answer to the question: Is it your purpose not to go into action again until the men now being drafted in the States are incorporated in the old regiments?"

The following is Gen. McClellan's reply—after referring to previous communications in relation to filling up the old regiments, he says:

"In the press of business, I then called an aide, and telling him what I wanted, dictated the subject. I directed him to write for me a dispatch, asking your Excellency to have the necessary order issued. I regret to say that this officer, after writing the dispatch, finding me still engaged, sent it to the telegraph office without first submitting it to me. I was under the impression that he had communicated my views. He, however, unfortunately added "before taking them into action again." This phrase was not authorized or intended by me. It has conveyed altogether an erroneous impression as to my plans and intentions. To your Excellency's question I answer distinctly, that I do not wish to delay or postpone the advance until the old regiments are filled by drafted men. I commenced crossing the army into Virginia yesterday, and shall push forward as rapidly as possible, to endeavor to meet the enemy."

Your Committee would say that, in their opinion, a staff officer who could, from negligence or other cause, add to a dispatch from the General commanding an army to the President, that which "was not authorized or intended," should at least be assigned to some other duty.

The movement of the army across the river, which was commenced upon the 26th of October, continued slowly, until, on the 5th of November Gen. McClellan announced to the President that the last corps of his army finished crossing on the 3d of November, just four weeks from the time the order to cross was given.

In the letter to the President, of the 17th of October, Gen. McClellan writes:

"Your excellency may be assured that I will not adopt a course which differs at all from your views, without first fully explaining my reasons and giving you time to issue such instructions as may seem best to you."

Gen. McClellan was relieved from the command of the army of the Potomac, in pursuance of the following orders:

HEADQUARTERS OF THE ARMY,
WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 5, 1862.

General: On receipt of the order of the President, sent herewith, you will immediately turn over your command to Maj.-Gen. Burnside, and repair to Trenton, N. J., reporting on your arrival at that place by telegraph for further orders.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,
H. W. HALLECK, General-in-Chief.

Maj.-Gen. McClellan, Commanding, &c., &c.

GEN. BURNSIDE'S COMMAND—THE MOVEMENTS ON THE RAPPAHANNOCK.

The Committee proceed to state the circumstances attending Gen. Burnside's movement to Fredericksburgh, and the causes of the failure of his first attempt to cross. This has been already fully set before the public in the report of the former Investigating Committee. The report then submits the following concerning the second attempt to cross and

THE BATTLE OF FREDERICKSBURGH.

Gen. Burnside then began to make preparations for another movement, bringing up the pontoons as rapidly as possible, to enable his forces to cross the river.

The plan determined upon was to cross the river at two points; the right wing to cross opposite Fredericksburgh, and the left wing to cross from three to four miles below the city. The left wing was composed of the Left Grand Division, with a corps from the Centre Grand Division, making a force of from 50,000 to 60,000 men, the whole being under command of Major-Gen. Franklin. The crossing was made successfully at both points, but with much opposition from sharpshooters on the right.

Gen. Burnside states the following in regard to his plan of attack:

"The enemy had cut a road along in the rear of the line of heights where we made our attack, by means of which they connected the two wings of their army, and avoided a long detour around through a bad country. I obtained from a colored man, from the other side of the town, information in regard to this new road, which proved to be correct. I wanted to obtain possession of that new road, and that was my reason for making an attack on the extreme left. I did not intend to make the attack on the right until that position had been taken, which I supposed would stagger the enemy, cutting their line in two; and then I proposed to make a direct attack on their front and drive them out of their works."

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE POTOMAC,
December 13, 8.55 A. M.

Gen. Harper will carry this dispatch to you and remain with you during the day. The General Commanding directs that you keep your whole command in position for a rapid movement down the old Richmond road, and you will send out at once a division, at least, to pass below Smithfield, to seize, if possible, the heights near Capt. Hamilton's, on this side of the Massaponax, taking care to keep it well supported and its line of retreat open. He has ordered another column of a division or more to be moved from Gen. Burnside's command up the plank road to his intersection of the telegraph road, where they will divide, with a view to seizing the heights on both of these roads. Holding these heights, with the heights near Capt. Hamilton's, will, I hope, compel the enemy to evacuate the whole ridge between these points. He makes these movements almost distant from each other, with a view of avoiding the possibility of a collision of our own forces, which might occur in a general movement during the fog. Two of Gen. Hooker's divisions are in your rear at the Bridgeport, and will remain there as reserves. Copies of these orders to Gens. Sumner and Hooker will be forwarded to you by an orderly very soon. You will keep your whole command in readiness to move at once as soon as the fog lifts. The watchword which, if possible, should be given to every company, will be "Scott."

I have the honor to be, general, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN G. PARKE, Chief of Staff.

Maj.-Gen. Franklin, Commanding Department, Grand Division Army of Potomac.

Gen. Franklin states, when last examined, that he received the above order at about 7½ A. M., and that he at once took measures to carry out what he considered to be the meaning of the order, that is, "an armed observation to ascertain where the enemy was." In his testimony, given when your Committee were at Falmouth, he says: "I put in all the troops that I thought it proper and prudent to put in. I fought the whole strength of my command, as far as I could, and at the same time keep my connection with the river open."

From the testimony it would appear that the attack was in reality made by one of the smallest divisions in Gen. Franklin's command—the division of Gen. Meade, numbering about 4,500 men. This division was supported on its right by Gen. Gibbon's division of about 5,000 men. On the left was Gen. Doubleday's division, forming the extreme left of our line, nearly at right angles with Gen. Meade's division, and extending to the river. Just as Gen. Meade's division advanced to the attack, Gen. Birney's division, of Gen. Stoneman's corps, numbering about 7,000, came up and took position immediately in the rear of Gen. Meade.

The division of Gen. Meade succeeded in piercing the first line of the enemy, and gaining the crest of the hill. Gen. Gibbon, seeing Gen. Meade advancing to the attack, ordered his division forward. After his last brigade had advanced, driving the enemy with the bayonet, and he was preparing his batteries to open upon a rebel regiment that made their appearance on his left, Gen. Gibbon was wounded and taken from the field. Gen. Meade's division having reached the crest of the hill, formed themselves in the presence of the reserves of the enemy, who opened fire upon them in front, and drove also regiment after regiment from their position. This was the superiority of the enemy, who had concentrated their forces from the two broken lines. As was also Gen. Meade's division, the enemy pressed their attack upon Birney's division. The enemy pressed their attack so hard that Birney's division could not hold their position, without renewing the attack, until they were ordered to withdraw across the river.

The losses sustained in the attack, in killed, wounded and missing, were as follows: Meade's division, 1,700; Gibbon's division, 1,600; Birney's division, 900.

Gen. Burnside, upon hearing of the small force ordered to attack the enemy, sent an order to Gen. Franklin to make a vigorous attack, with his whole force. Several of the witnesses testify that had the attack been pressed with all the available force under Gen. Franklin's command, it would have been successful. Gen. Franklin testifies that it was not an order, but a request, and that when he received it, it was too late to renew the attack, and therefore he did not do it.

Gen. Franklin testifies as follows:

"The order under which I was acting directed that the line of retreat should be kept open. It also directed that I should hold my troops in position for a rapid march down the Richmond road. I never dreamed that this was considered as a strong attack at all until since the battle took place. At that time I had no idea that it was the main attack, but supposed it was an armed observation to ascertain where the enemy was. * * * * I was strengthened in this opinion by the staff officer who brought it, (the order.)

* * * * * * *

Q.—Did you not understand, from this order, that you were to use all the troops necessary to seize and hold the heights near Capt. Hamilton's, and that the General commanding considered that that was necessary to be done in order to secure your retreat?

A.—No; I did not. I should suppose that the order would not have limited me to "at least a division," as the wording of it shows, had such been his intention; and being so explicit as to keep my whole command in position to move along the old Richmond road. If he had intended me to use my whole force if necessary, to hold that hill, he hardly would have coupled it with the condition to keep my command in readiness for this other movement.

Q.—Was the other movement feasible until after the possession of those heights by our troops?

A.—I think that the other movement, if it had been ordered with my whole force, would have necessarily involved the possession of those heights. Had I been ordered to move my whole force along the Richmond road, I should have been compelled to take all that would be found in the road, and those heights would have been in the road.

Q.—As it was indispensable that we should have possession of those heights in order to move down the old Richmond road, and as you were ordered to send out at least one division to pass below Smithfield, and seize, if possible, those heights, did you not deem time the most important element, when repeated in the first attempt, under the attack?

A.—I think it did; but by the time the rebels were driven back into the woods by Birney's division and Sickles' division, it was too late in the day to do it. At that time, by five o'clock, and it was too late then to make such an attempt with the slightest hope of success."

The testimony of all the witnesses before your Committee proves most conclusively that, had the attack been made upon the left wing, as Gen. Burnside had ordered, it would have succeeded for that purpose, the plan of Gen. Burnside would have been completely successful, and our army would have achieved a most brilliant victory.

After the attack on Saturday our army remained in position until Sunday night, when it was withdrawn across the river without loss.

GEN. BURNSIDE'S SUBSEQUENT PLANS—INTERFERENCE OF GENERALS.

Shortly after the battle of Fredericksburgh, Gen. Burnside devised a plan for attacking the enemy in his front. The main army was to cross at a place some six or seven miles below Fredericksburgh. The positions for the artillery to protect the crossing were all selected; the roads were all surveyed, and the corduroy was cut for preparing the roads. At the same time a feint of crossing was to be made some distance above Falmouth, which feint could be turned into a positive attack, should the enemy direct cover the movement below; otherwise the main attack was to be made below.

In connection with this movement of the main army, a cavalry expedition was organized, consisting of 2,500 of the best cavalry in the Army of the Potomac, 1,000 of whom were picked men. The plan of that expedition was as follows: Accompanied by a brigade of infantry, detailed to protect the crossing of the Rappahannock, it was to proceed up to Kelly's Ford; there the 1,000 picked men were to cross, and to proceed to the Rapidan and cross that river at Raccoon Ford; then to go onward and cross the Virginia Central Railroad at Louisa Court-house; the James River at Goochland or Carter's, blowing up the locks of the James River Canal at the place of crossing; cross the Richmond and Lynchburgh Railroad at a point south of there, blowing up the iron bridge at the place of crossing; cross the Richmond, Petersburgh and Weldon Railroad where it crosses the Nottoway River, destroying the railroad bridge there; and then proceed on by Gen. Paton's command, and effect a junction with Gen. Pope at Suffolk, where steamers were to be in waiting to take them to Aquia Creek.

To distract the attention of the enemy, and deceive them in regard to which body of cavalry was the attacking column, at the time the thousand picked men crossed the Rappahannock a portion of the remaining 1,500 was to proceed toward Warrenton; another portion toward Culpepper Court-House; and the remainder were to accompany the thousand picked men as far as Raccoon Ford, and then return. While this country expedition was in progress the general movement was to be made across the river.

On the 20th of December an order was issued for the entire command to prepare three days' cooked rations; to have their wagons filled with ten days' small rations, if possible; to have from ten to twelve days' supply of beef cattle with them; to forage for their horses and their artillery and cavalry horses, and the requisite amount of ammunition—in fact, to be in a condition to move at twelve hours' notice.

Shortly after that order was issued, Gen. John Newton and Gen. John Cochrane—the one commanding a division and the other a brigade in the Left Grand Division, under Gen. William B. Franklin—came up to Washington on leave of absence. Previous to obtaining leave of absence from Gen. Franklin, they informed him and Gen. Wm. F. Smith that when they came to Washington they should take the opportunity to represent the condition of things in authority here the dispirited condition of the army, and the danger there was in attempting any movement against the enemy at that time.

When they reached Washington, Gen. Cochrane, as he states, endeavored to find certain members of Congress, to whom to make the desired communication. Failing to find them, he determined to seek an interview with the President for the purpose of making the communication directly to him. On proceeding to the Executive Mansion, he there met Secretary Seward, to whom he explained the object of his being there and the general purport of his proposed communication to the President, and requested him to procure an interview for them, which Mr. Seward promised to do, and which he did do.

That day the interview took place, and Gen. Newton opened the subject to the President. At first the President, as Gen. Newton expresses it, "very naturally conceived that they had come there for the purpose of injuring Gen. Burnside, and suggesting some other person to take his place." Gen. Newton states, that while he firmly believed that the principal cause of the dispirited condition of the army was the want of confidence in the military capacity of Gen. Burnside, he deemed it improper to say so to the President "right square out," and therefore endeavored to convey the same idea indirectly. When asked if he considered it any less improper to do such a thing indirectly than it was to do it directly, he qualified his previous assertion by saying that his object was to inform the President of what he considered to be the condition of the army, in the hope that the President would make inquiry, and learn the true cause for himself. Upon perceiving this impression upon the mind of the President, Gens. Newton and Cochran state that they hastened to assure the President that he was entirely mistaken, and so far succeeded, that at the close of the interview the President said to them he was glad they had called upon him, and that he hoped that good would result from the interview.

To return to Gen. Burnside. The cavalry expedition had started; the brigade of infantry detailed to accompany it had crossed the Rappahannock at Richard's Ford, and returned by way of Ellis' Ford, leaving the way clear for the cavalry to cross at Kelly's Ford. The day they had arranged to make the crossing, Gen. Burnside received from the President the following telegram:

"I have good reason for saying that you must not make a general movement without letting me know of it."

Gen. Burnside states that he could not imagine, at the time, what reason the President could have for sending him such a telegram. None of the officers of his command, except one or two of his staff who had remained in camp, had been told anything of his plan beyond the simple fact that a movement was to be made. He could only suppose that the dispatch related in some way to important military movements in other parts of the country, in which it was necessary to have cooperation.

Upon the receipt of that telegram, steps were immediately taken to halt the cavalry expedition where it then was (at Kelly's Ford) until further orders. A portion of it was shortly afterward sent off to intercept Stuart, who had just made a raid to Dumfries, and the neighborhood of Fairfax Court-House, which it failed to do.

Gen. Burnside came to Washington to ascertain from the President the true state of the case. He was informed by the President that some general officers from the Army of the Potomac, whose names he declined to give, had called upon him, and represented that Gen. Burnside contemplated some making a movement, and that the army was so disorganized and demoralized that any attempt to make a movement at that time must result in disaster; that no prominent officers in the Army of the Potomac were in favor of any movement at that time.

Gen. Burnside informed the President that none of his officers had been informed what his plan was, and then proceeded to explain it in detail to the President. He urged upon the President to grant him permission to carry it out, but the President declined to do so at that time. Gen. Halleck and Secretary Stanton was sent for, and then learned, for the first time, of the President's action in stopping the movement; although Gen. Halleck was previously aware that a movement was contemplated by Gen. Burnside. Gen. Halleck, with Gen. Burnside, held that the officers who had made those representations to the President should be at once dismissed the service. Gen. Burnside remained here at that time for two days, but no conclusion was reached upon the subject.

When he returned to his camp he learned that many of the details of the general movement, and the details of the cavalry expedition, had become known to the rebel sympathizers in Washington, thereby rendering that plan impracticable. When asked to whom he had communicated his plan, he stated that he had told no one in Washington except the President, Secretary Stanton, and Gen. Halleck; and in his camp none knew of it except one or two of his staff officers who had remained in camp all the time. He professed himself unable to tell how his plans had become known to the enemy.

A correspondence then took place between the President, Gen. Halleck and Gen. Burnside. Gen. Burnside desired distinct authority from Gen. Halleck, or some one authorized to give it, to make a movement across the river. While urging the importance and necessity for such a movement, he candidly admitted that there was hardly a general officer in his command who approved of it. While willing to take upon himself all the responsibility of the movement, and promising to keep in view the President's caution concerning running any risk of destroying the Army of the Potomac, he desired to have at least Gen. Halleck's sanction or permission to make the movement. Gen. Halleck replied that while he had always favored a forward movement, he could not take the responsibility of giving any directions as to how and when it should be made.

Gen. Burnside then determined to make a movement without any further correspondence on the subject. He was unable to devise any as promising as the one just thwarted by this interference of his subordinate officers, which interference gave the enemy the time, if not the means to ascertain what he had proposed to do. He, however, devised a plan of movement, and proceeded to put it in execution. As his well known, it was rendered abortive in consequence of the severe storm which took place shortly after the movement began.

Gen. Burnside states that, besides the inclemency of the weather, there was another powerful reason for abandoning the movement, viz: the almost universal feeling among his general officers against it. Some of these officers freely gave vent to their feelings in the presence of their inferiors.

In connection with this, and also what had taken place during the battle of Fredericksburgh, &c., Gen. Burnside directed an order to be issued, which he styled General Order No. 8.

That order dismissed some officers from the service, subject to the approval of the President, relieved others from duty with the Army of the Potomac, and also pronounced sentence of death upon some deserters who had been tried and convicted.

Gen. Burnside states that he had become satisfied that it was absolutely necessary that some such couplet should be made, in order to enable him to maintain the proper authority over the army under his command. The order was duty signed and issued, and only waited publication.

Two or three of his most trusted Staff officers represented to Gen. Burnside that should he then publish that order, he would force upon the President the necessity of at once sanctioning it, or, by refusing to do so, assume an attitude of hostility to Gen. Burnside. The publication of the order was accordingly delayed for the time.

Gen. Burnside came to Washington and laid the order before the President, with the distinct assurance that in no other way could he exercise a proper command over the army of the Potomac; and he asked the President to sanction the order, or accept his resignation as Major-General. The President acknowledged that Gen. Burnside was right, but declined to decide without consulting with some of his advisers. To this Gen. Burnside replied that, if the President took time for consultation, he would not be allowed to publish that order, and therefore asked to have his resignation accepted at once. This the President declined to do.

Gen. Burnside returned his camp, and came again to Washington that night at the request of the President, and the next morning called upon the President for his decision. He was informed that the President declined to approve his order No. 8, but had consulted to relieve him from the command of the Army of the Potomac, and to appoint Gen. Hooker in his place. Thereupon Gen. Burnside again insisted that his resignation be accepted. This the President declined to do; and, after some urging, Gen. Burnside consented to take a leave of absence for thirty days, with the understanding that, at the end of that time, he should be assigned to duty, as he deemed it improper to hold a commission as Major-General, and receive his pay without rendering service therefor. Gen. Burnside objected to the wording of the order which relieved him of his command, and which stated that it was at his own request, as being unjust to him and unfounded in fact; but upon representation that any other order would do injury to the cause, he consented to let it remain as it then read.

The Committee append to their report some reflections upon the general course and prospects of the war—holding that it can only be ended by fighting, and that, with courage, constancy and unity on the part of the people, everything promises a speedy and victorious end. The report is signed by

"HOSTETTER'S BITTERS," we reply.
In HEALTH'S SUPREME VICTORIES—SUE!

As a means of regenerating the disordered and enfeebled system, regulating every function of the bodily organs, reviving the depressed spirits, invigorating the constitution, and prolonging life, no medicinal preparation, either of the past or the present time, has been so completely and universally successful as

HOSTETTER'S CELEBRATED STOMACH BITTERS.

Against the vapors foul prepare,
That fever-taint the heavy air.
Drink not unmixed the water found
In prairies, woods, or marshy ground.
If sedentary toil you ply,
Nature you must assist—or die—
For when debarred from exercise
Pure artificial aid she cries.
Medicine's grand purpose and intent
Is threatened evil to prevent:
And if you'd be relieved or spared
From ills that crush the unprepared,
Hostetter's Bitters use—for note
They are the SUREST ANTIDOTE.

To set at defiance the miasma of unhealthy soils, the poison of unwholesome water, the effluvia of crowded workrooms and factories, and the baneful influence of sedentary employments, it is only necessary to be furnished with

HOSTETTER'S CELEBRATED STOMACH BITTERS.

Dyspepsia's pangs, that rack and grind
The body, and depress the mind;
Agues, that as they go and come,
Make life a constant martyrdom;
Colics and dysenteric pains,
'Neath which the strong man's vigor wanes;
Bilious complaints, those tedious ills,
Ne'er conquered yet by drastic pills;
Dread diseases that cannot be
Cured by destructive mercury;
Slow constitutional decay
That brings Death nearer, day by day;
Nervous prostration, mental gloom—
Heralds of madness or the tomb;
For these—though mineral nostrums fail—
Means of Relief at least we hail,
Hostetter's Bitters—medicine rare,
Not to prevent, alone, but cure.

In dyspepsia, fever and ague, bilious complaints, constitutional and nervous debility, constipation, scurvy, nausea, spasms, and in all complaints of Men or Women, proceeding from carnal or inherent weakness of the body, the one great remedy and restorative is

HOSTETTER'S CELEBRATED STOMACH BITTERS.

To wanderers on sea or land,
From Polar shore to Tropic strand;
To household here, in region new,
And dwellers in great cities, too;
To soldiers in camp, fort and field,
Who need against disease a shield;
To miners, California bound,
And tillers of wet, marshy ground;
To feeble wives of fragile mold,
To young and middle-aged, and old;
To those in health, who would enjoy
Heaven's best gifts without alloy;
To all the strugglers, weak and pale,
Who droop, yet know not what they ail
Hostetter's Bitters we present
As Health's most potent element.

If there is any value in public opinion, or any weight in medical testimony, the very best and safest Tonic, Generative and Alterative now before the world is

HOSTETTER'S CELEBRATED STOMACH BITTERS.

Sold by respectable druggists in all parts of the world.
